Campus officer charged

A K-State Police officer was arrested Saturday night on four counts of taking aggravated indecent liberties with a child.

Harry Woodruff was brought into the Riley County Police Department Saturday night for questioning and was subsequently arrested. He is confined in the Riley County Jail with bond set at $7,500. He will be arraigned at 1 p.m. today.

Woodruff has worked for the campus police for two years. He also worked for the RCPD in the 1970s.

A source in the K-State Police Department, who asked to remain anonymous, said the background check done before Woodruff was hired showed him unsuitable for employment, but that the check was ignored

"He failed his background check," the source said. "The chief was advised of this and hired him anyway.

"On background investigation, they found he worked for the RCPD in the '70s and left under suspicious circumstances," the source said. "This was known by Chief Beckom when he (Woodruff) was hired.

"Beckom hired this guy, and complaints were made to the University, and the University did nothing about it."

K-State Police Chief Charles Beckom denied

The president of Black Student Union and another man were arrested at Jardine Terrace Apartments Aug. 9 on counts of unlawful use of a telephone to arrange the sale of a controlled substance.

John Kitchings, senior in psychology and BSU president, and Daryl Folse, 31, were among several people caught in a citywide drug raid, said Officer Darla Gee of the Riley County Police Department.

Folse was also charged with possession of cocaine with intent to sell and conspiracy to sell Kitchings was released on $4,000 bond and will be arraigned in court today. Folse was released on $10,000 bond.

Kitchings said he is innocent. "I was charged with talking on the telephone about the possession, manufacture or distribution of drugs," Kitchings said.

"It was very unspecific," he said. "I was not

"I'm burnt to a crisp," said Wright, program director for KMKF-FM 101.5, otherwise known as K-Rock.

K-Rock and TCI Cable of Manhattan were the main sponsors of Aggiefest '92, a day-long music fest that featured live performances from Elmo & the Deadbeats, Mere Mortals, Nash Vegas Cowhands, Salty Iguanas and the headliners. the Romantics. The band XYZ was also scheduled to play, Wright said, but the band's bus broke down.

The event took place in the parking lot at the corner of 12th and Laramie streets, providing plenty of room for milling about, as well as easy access to the beer gardens of Last Chance Restaurant & Saloon and Kites's Bar & Grille.

Proceeds from the event went to the Michael Meyer Bone Marrow Transplant Fund and the Flint Hills Breadbasket.

A city ordinance prohibited Aggiefest patrons from carrying alcohol into the cordoned-off parking lot where the bands played, a circumstance that was blamed for a sparse crowd early in the afternoon. Most people spent their time drinking legally in the beer gardens, usually only several feet from the music area.

"Personally, I disagree with the city ordinance, but it is an ordinance, and we abide by that," said Wright, adding that he thought many of the city's and University's policies regarding alcohol lack consistency.

"I wish there were fewer double standards," Wright said.

It could be argued the absence of alcohol was a reason for the relatively trouble-free atmosphere that reigned at Aggiefest '92.

Florida braces for deadly storm

ASSOCIATED PRESS

MIAMI — Hurricane Andrew surged relentlessly toward southern Florida on Sunday, and forecasters warned it would be the most powerful storm to hit the United States in decades. More than 1 million residents were told to flee.

The hurricane ripped into the Bahamas Sunday afternoon with 120 mph winds, heavy rain and surging tides. The outlying eastern islands of Abaco and Eleuthera were hit first. Four deaths have been reported.

"It's on a dead course for South Florida. I hoped I would never experience this," said Bob Sheets, director of the National Hurricane Center in suburban Coral Gables. We've not seen anything like this in the past few decades.

Gov. Lawton Chiles issued a state of emergency and activated National Guard forces as Andrew grew to a Category 4 storm, the same as Hurricane Hugo in 1989, with winds of 150 mph.

Forecasters expected it to reach Category 5 — the worst category, with winds topping 155 mph - as it crossed the Gulf Stream to Florida.

"I'm prepared for the worst," said Jim McDermott, 65, of Marathon, who spent Sunday evening at a Red Cross s

Improvements for mainframe

JENNIFER BEALS

After eight months of study, planning and research, the future of the K-State mainframe will be dealt with on a local level.

With the decision made, improvements will be made to the existing mainframe beginning in two years as part of a five-year plan.

Originally, members of the Computer Information Technology Advisory Committee and its three sub-committees, combined with Provost James Coffman and Vice Provost Bob Kruh, examined a possible merger with the University of Kansas or using the storage and memory capacities of the IBM mainframe based in Boulder, Colo.

Late last spring, committee members met with IBM representatives to hear presentations on using a supplementary mainframe, or outsourcing. If K-State had chosen to use IBM's services, the diskstorage devices would have been kept in Dallas.

During that same week last spring, KU representatives met with K-State administrators to discuss possible consolidation. At that time, Richard Mann, chief administrator of computer facilities at KU, was submitting a draft of a partnership agreement.

Although the process of weighing the pros and cons of each option had taken more than eight months, the issue of transferring academic, enrollment and financial aid records didn't come up until Coffman and Kruh proposed it in a Computing and Network Services staff meeting in February.

When the issue of a possible merger was raised, Stephen Welch, interim director of computing and

"Within the next two years we'll be making a set of discrete improvements," he said. "The three years following, new dollars will come into the program along with the reallocation of present dollars to make significant progress and dramatically improve the networks."

English GTAs' relocation seen as inconvenient

The English graduate teaching assistants have moved their desks from Denison Hall to Nichols Hall basement, which some GTAs say will be an inconvenience for them as well as students.

Sarah Cunningham, president of the Student Association for Graduates in English, said she feels being in the same room will be confusing, tense and crowded.

"With all of us in one area and no separation between about 50 desks, I can see us getting very tense," Cunningham said. "Once they find where we are at, they will have to wait in this small hallway while other students are walking in going to be moved again next year," Cunningham said. "This is the worse part of the situation, and it is becoming annoying."

However, being in the same room will be helpful for the new GTAs, Cunningham said. Nichols has windows and phones which is a look on the brighter side.

"This should work better because there is more room," said Dean Hall, English department head. "The teachers will have their own desks. Also, they will be located in the same room which will be more convenient for the students to find."

The former GTA offices were replaced with a new computerized writing lab and a small conference room. These rooms have been carpeted and remodeled for a homelike look.

"These will mainly be used by freshmen," Hall said. "The lab, which cost about $80,000, was purchased through a grant the department received in December."

The lab will be used by students on a walk-in basis to type their papers. Assistants will be available to help them with any questions or problems they might have.

The small conference room will be used for talking with students individually at a table.

"The idea of a conference room was to provide the students with something besides a classroom atmosphere." Hall said. "The teachers can arrange the tables to talk to several students or just one at their convenience."

READERS WRITE

FROM THE OPINION PAGE EDITOR

Your letters are needed and desired

t all started last week when I crawled out of bed one morning, or afternoon, and realized that in a few short days I would be the next Collegian Opinion Page editor.

Me, an editor. What a laugh. I can barely spell my own last name right half the time, and here I am making a stab at an editor's job. I've had professors curse my writing as dull and esoteric, people I don't even know tell me that I'm full of, well, you know what, and mental gremlins telling me that I shouldn't quit my day job.

But sometimes, and for me most of the time, common sense is overshadowed by a curious little desire to do something different. As a further example, I give you bungee jumping. Or watching the Home Shopping Network. Not that I've done these things, mind you, but being a Collegian editor has to rank up there somewhere.

So I figure for the next semester I'll be a walking target. A repository for a gajillion views and ideas, problems and solutions. I can only hope that my shrink has plenty of open time on his schedule. Heaven knows I'll probably make more than one visit.

By the same token though, I also hope that all of you will take the opportunity to send me your views. Even if it's tied to a brick and tossed through my window. Or carved into my car's paint job.

If you have a view, however, the most effective way of getting someone to read it is to limit it to about 150 words, be brief and to the point. Then drop it by Kedzie 106. Make sure to bring ur student ID. Of course, we reserve the right to edit it for semester for the books.

Clinton dodging barbs

HOUSTON - In an ironic switch on the controversy that dogged Dan Quayle four years ago, Presi'nt Bush's campaign strategists are trying to make an issue of Bill Clinton's Vietnam-era draft record.

It's going to take adroit handling to take advantage now of a topic that nagged their own vice presidential nominee last time. But the Bush people think they can use it to boost the Republican ticket among men middle-aged and up, particularly the middle-class and blue-collar voters they're trying to reclaim. To that generation, military service equaled patriotism, a legacy of World War II.

Clinton and Quayle both avoided the Vietnam draft, the vice president by enlisting in the Indiana National Guard, the Democratic presidential nominee through a student and ROTC deferment and, later, the luck of a high draft-lottery

But Quayle says "there's a big difference" because he chose to serve by joining the National Guard, and Clinton chose not to serve at all. Clinton says he relinquished a deferment and voluntarily put his name into the draft pool in 1969, but drew a high number and was not called.

MEARS

Vice President and columnist for the Associated Press

The draft question became one of Clinton's campaign headaches back in New Hampshire; he dealt with it in detail then, and when it comes up now, he says he did nothing wrong.

"All I've been asked about by the press is a woman I didn't sleep with and a draft I didn't dodge," he lamented of those so-called character issues during the New Hampshire presidential primary

Now the Bush campaign is out to revive the second of those topics, the draft, in the fall campaign.

There was no subtlety from conservative Patrick Buchanan. "When Bill Clinton's turn came in Vietnam, he sat up in a dormitory in Oxford, England, and figured out how to dodge the draft," Buchanan

"We'll be talking about the values of George Bush vs. those of Bill Clinton, talking about a man who quit school to go fight for his country and one who went to school to avoid fighting for it," said Sen. Alan Simpson of Wyoming. Bush flew combat missions in the Pacific in World War II as the youngest pilot in the Navy.

Questions like that were a problem for Quayle almost from the day he was chosen for the Bush ticket. He enlisted in the Indiana National Guard in 1969 after his college deferment ended. There were suggestions, which he denied, that family influence helped him get the Guard slot that kept him out of the draft. He said his unit could have been activated any time during the six years he served.

In Houston, Quayle said there's no comparison between Clinton's record and his. "I wore the uniform for six years," he said in an NBC-TV interview. "I chose to serve my country. Bill Clinton chose not to.

Auditions offer students role in K-State productions

With a new semester of new classes full of new faces and new work, the thought of something else new may just send you running for a brand-spanking-new straitjacket. But, hey, new is good, and here's your chance as K-State theater productions fall auditions begin Encompassing four shows, the tryouts are open in the most literal sense of the word. Any full- or parttime student can show up and try his or her hand at the thespian arts.

We basically need students from all different levels of abilities, so they really don't need to be shy," said Marci Maullar, assistant professor of theater and general manager of theater productions.

"Directors look not only at your abilities, but also at whether or not you fit the part in the production," Maullar said. "And even then, they will sometimes take a chance and try to bring a new dimension to the character.

The shows include three K-State Theatre Group productions: the popular musical comedy "The Best

Small crowd only disappointment at concert

BY THE COLLEGIAN STAFF

was only one disappointing aspect of Friday afternoon's Aggiefest '92.

The concert was from noon to 8 p.m. in the parking lot at 12th and Laramie streets, it was a beautiful day, the five bands all played powerful sets, it only cost $3 to get in and free T-shirts were given out. REVIEW

Unfortunately, for the first three bands, it seemed like only about 20 people were there.

Elmo and the Deadbeats opened the show. One of the highlights of their set was a cover of the Fabulous Thunderbirds' mid-'80s hit "Wrap it Up."

After Elmo and the Deadbeats came Mere Mortals, who played adequately for about half an hour, followed by the Nash Vegas Cowhands.

The Cowhands boast a sound "deep from the heart of Dixie," according to the lead singer. The Cowhands delivered just that with songs like "An American Boy" and "Walking in Circles."

The band, which comes from Phoenix, was playing a gig in Hays when it received the offer to play at Aggiefest. The Salty Iguanas took the stage after the Cowhands. About 100 people finally showed up for the band's mostly instrumental set. The Iguanas performed with more energy than the night before at the Wareham Opera House, and they also played without their customary psychedelic cooking-oil light show.

The Romantics finally took the stage about 6:30 p.m. They played an energetic set, including "What I Like About You," "Talking in Your Sleep" and "One in a Million."

"It was awesome. When they started playing 'What I Like About You,' about 100 people were out there slam dancing. It was intense," said Jerrod Roh, junior in secondary education.

The show ended with a two-song encore by the Romantics. About 500 people had finally arrived by the end of the night.

Headlining Aggiefest '92, the Romantics play their '80s hit "What I Like About You" to an enthusiastic crowd of fans. Aggiefest '92 started at noon and ended when the Romantics finished their set about 9 p.m.

Program helps minority

ROY GRABER

For the second consecutive year, the College of Engineering will be operating with an additional $30,000 in its budget.

In June 1990, Andrew Cordero, Minority Engineering Program director, received a call about grant proposals from Atlantic Richfield Co. The grant would be offered to help install a program called "A Wise Investment in Student Excellence." The basis of WISE was to help expand the minority student program within the college.

"Minority students are really atrisk students because the programs here are not originally designed to well match with students from a different ethnic background," Cordero said.

"Most minority students tend to come from closely knit backgrounds and communities. When they come to a campus of 20,000 students without any family members, it puts up barriers that are hard to overcome. WISE tries to overcome this feeling of isolation."

One of the program's components is grouping minority students together in common course sections like chemistry or college algebra. An orientation is also offered to help students learn important study skills, as well as to teach new students to adapt to a college student lifestyle.

Workshops are also held to encourage group effort on difficult classroom-related projects.

Donald Rathbone, dean of the College of Engineering, said that WISE should not only help the college by means of retention, but also in terms of recruitment.

"We're trying to get more minorities in engineering," he said. "We need more minorities and women, but we don't quite have all of the role models because the college is mostly all white males. The numbers are getting larger, but not as large as we want them. Now we are trying to compensate or adjust that.'

There were 25 students who participated in the WISE program last year. Cordero said there were roughly 13 students who were eligible to participate, but did not.

Though the program's intent was to keep students interested and enrolled in the college, Cordero said that he could not measure the extent of success in that category until he saw the amount of participating students who returned to K-State for the semester.

"You never actually know who is going to show until registration is finished and classes start," he said.

Cordero said program's could be measured by comparing the grade point average of students participating in the WISE program to those who don't. Those participating had a grade point average nearly one grade point above those who didn't participate.

'An unbelievable experience'

SHANE KEYSER/Collegian

Craig Wilson relaxes in the dugout before an autograph session at Lawrence-Dumont Stadium.

Wilson a summer Olympian

"When people mentioned the team, everybody immediately thought of the gold medal. What they don't realize is the dominance of the Cuban

After spending four years rewriting the K-State record books, former Wildcat baseball player Craig Wilson added a chapter to his storied book of feats this summer with a trip to the Olympics.

"That was just an unbelievable experience," Wilson said. "It was a spectacle for two weeks."

Wilson, who holds K-State records in 11 offensive categories, including career RBI, runs scored and hits, said the trip to Barcelona, Spain, was something he will never forget. All this, he said, despite the fact that he was mired in what he called the worst slump of his career.

In the Summer Games, Wilson managed two hits in just 10 atbats. He was held without an RBI.

During the summer, Team USA traveled the country in preparation for the Olympics. During that time, Wilson collected 19 hits in 83 atbats, just a .229 clip, stroked a pair of home runs and was credited with 10 RBI.

This came at the heels of a senior year in which he batted .416 for the Cats and was named Big Eight Player of the Year.

"I could never get in a rhythm," Wilson said, referring to the practice of rotating players every three games. "When you're in a slump, you just want to keep hitting. Going in spurts makes that a lot harder to do.'

And the pressure of being a member of the U.S. Olympic baseball team didn't help matters,

'It put a little pressure on all of us," Wilson said. "When people mentioned the U.S. baseball team, everybody immediately thought of the gold medal. What they don't realize is the dominance of the Cuban team."

That Cuban team, which eventually claimed the gold, defeated Team USA in the first round of medal competition.

That left the Americans to play Japan in the bronze-medal game. Japan won 8-3, and Wilson finished his Olympic tour with a dismal .200 average.

Wilson said he didn't do as well

But his summer-long slump wasn't the result of Olympic pressure, said Jerry Weinstein, Team USA assistant coach and baseball coach at Sacramento City

"It wasn't because he put extra pressure on himself," Weinstein said. "He controlled his emotions and is a real level person. He just never quite got on track offensively.

Wilson, though, said he took both the loss and his hitting woes

"It would have been nice to win," Wilson said, "but it was still a great experience.'

And that experience went beyond what took place on the diamond.

Team USA spent much of the summer at major-league stadiums, members received memorabilia, as well as advice, from big-leaguers.

Wilson and the rest of the team stayed at the Olympic Village for the duration of the Games, where they crossed paths with such people as tennis gold medalist Jennifer Capriati, swimmer

And after the Olympics, the team visited the White House to meet not only President Bush, but Amold Schwarzenegger as well.

"That was another unbelievable experience," Wilson said. "This whole summer was so exciting.

It's hard to put into words." And with the Olympic experience still fresh in his memory, Wilson said, all he can

Wilson was drafted in the 13th round of the major-league baseball draft by the Chicago White Sox. He is still unsigned, however, and is waiting to hear from the team.

"I don't think they have immediate plans for me," Wilson said. "There's really no rush. I'm just waiting for that call to come

Wilson, who is a Chicago native, said he is expecting to hear from the Sox within the next two

"I'm ecstatic," he said. "I can't wait to get started."

Money, guns and attitude

To one hunts as grand as a Republican. Only a Republican has the money, guns, and attitude to follow the example of proto-Republican Theodore Roosevelt.

The 1992 Republican platform quotes Roosevelt heavily on the subject of natural resources and various uses of public lands. They love the guy.

Here's what the Republican Party's 1992 platform says about guns: "Republicans defend the constitutional right to keep and bear arms..."

And they mean it. Need guns to protect the country, and they're good for hunting, too. Not all Republicans hunt with guns. Some do the job with bow-andarrow, some with fishing Bowhunter/ motor city madman/ rock journalist Ted Nugent covered the Republican National Convention last week for MTV. He publishes a bowhunting magazine and runs a camp for hunting-deprived innercity kids.

And you can bet he votes Republican.

President Bush, also present at the convention, takes long vacations with former Secretary of State James Baker to fish the high streams of Wyoming and the Atlantic coast. Flyfishing is very G. O. P. Very Uncle Sam.

SKOOG

No one can afford to hunt like a Republican. Large-caliber weapons, camp stoves, permits, and extended trips to the Yukon do not come cheap. And the best hunting lands are owned by Republicans, or by the government which is in turn owned by Republicans.

The Democratic sportsperson goes down to the river, plunks in a lead weight with a worm. Or she heads out to her uncle's farm and hopes there's pheasant around, or quail.

When a Democrat gets rich, she starts hunting in better places, buys a new gun, takes long trips and soon becomes a Republican. The way of the Upward mobility in hunting is rarely addressed. Elk, moose, and northern pike are reserved for the upper 2-percent tax bracket, while the peasants settle for pheasant. One of the great drives in America is the aspiration to slaughter large hoofstock. Gus Hall and the remainder of the Socialist Party favor mergansers. Only those who demand public ownership of production in the aftermath of the Soviet Union have the fortitude to sit in a duck blind so long for so small a bird.

Out and out Communists are across the board ice-fishermen. Interestingly, so was Sen. Joe

Back to Democratic hunting for a moment. Republicans enjoy stereotyping the Democrats as bureaucratic, can't do a thing without red

Gov. Joan Finney, a Democrat, went hunting last spring. A one-shot turkey shoot out western Kansas way. She tugged along her daughter/chief of staff Mary Holliday.

They had never been hunting, and in order to legally hunt with a gun in Kansas, one must have finished a hunter safety course, and have been certified by a hunter safety instructor, unless the prospective hunter was born before June 1,1957.

Finney met the 1957 deadline with room to spare. But her daughter didn't. Neither did sincefired Secretary of Commerce Laura Nichols.

Happy to be of help, the head of Kansas Wildlife and Parks, Jack Lacey, presented Nichols and Holliday with hunter safety certificates and signed them with a black pen. No 10 hours of training, just a certificate between political pals.

Soon this was brought to public notice, and many Kansans laughed, including Attorney General and Republican Robert Stephan. Laughed Jack Lacey out of office.

It was another case of attempted upward hunting mobility. Since they were Democrats and first-time hunters, they should have begun with quail or pheasant, and then worked their way up to wild turkey.

The Wildcat football team won more games in 1991 than any K-State team since 1954.

It's a use it or lose it sort-ofthing. Students pay fees for the availability of K-State services.

The largest fee, $80, goes to Lafene Health Services. Whether Lafene is used is up to the student.

"There are no exemptions to the fees," Ratzloff said, "even if a student has health coverage from another source, the student still pays for Lafene."

Student Senate assesses fees to determine if it will continue to fund the organizations.

AGC is not just a group for students studying construction science. It is a Washington, D.C., based lobbying organization, open to anyone. Members use their construction skills to work on community service projects. In addition to the standard, nonstudent chapters of AGC, there are roughly 100 student chapters.

Brent Korte, a senior in construction science, is serving his second term as chapter president. Korte said about 25 chapters applied for the competition.

"They picked us as chapter of the year because they look heavily community service. see how much you help the campus and the community and how you help each other learn."

The AGC members worked on a myriad of projects in the past year. Fall semester projects included repair work on Goodnow Cabin, constructing the American Legion Memorial on McCall Road, building an extension to a Sunset Zoo cage, and adding a sidewalk and playground at the Manhattan Crisis Center. They also moved the Children's Museum constructed more than $10,000 worth of playground equipment at Topeka Collegiate Elementary AGC members not only did the manual work involved in these projects, but also ordered materials and other paperwork involved.

"I think that being a member of AGC is the way to go," said Ed Downey, a senior in construction science. "I had a lot of fun when I was pouring concrete at Sunset Zoo. It was great to know that I was helping out the community and making the zoo more enjoyable for other people when they visit."

Korte also said helping others was his biggest gain from involvement in AGC

"It really impresses me to see that everyone's together, and it's not hard to get the group together to work on a community service project and give up a little time on a Saturday afternoon," he said. "I guess that's why I got pretty active

Another competition-deciding factor was the number of members who attended the AGC National Conference in Dallas in the summer. Korte said K-State sent 45 AGC members, which was a larger contingent than that of Dallas' local

"When we got down there we had to wear badges that said that we were students," Korte said. "Whenever someone would see or hear that you were a student they would say, 'Well, you must be from K-State.' That really impressed me."

When I found out the news I was really excited," Downey said of the win. "It's a real honor to know that you're a part of something that's No. 1 in the nation, and it makes you want to do even better."

Professor receives national electrical engineering award

ROY GRABER

Collegian

William Hudson arrived at K-State two years ago with all of the credentials needed to be a professor in the College of Engineering. He has now added one more to the list.

This summer, Hudson received the Institute of Electrical and Electronics Engineers Outstanding Branch Counselor and Adviser Award. He was one of only seven advisers in the nation to earn this honor. There are more than 700 IEEE chapters nationwide.

Hudson said IEEE is one of the largest professional organizations around, and the K-State student chapter is a branch of the Kansas City IEEE chapter.

'I really enjoy working with students," Hudson said. "When I came to K-State, they were looking for an adviser for IEEE. There was already a program, so it was easy to get things going."

In addition to his role as branch counselor, Hudson teaches computer engineering classes and does research on neural networks and adaptive aids. He also is an academic adviser for about 40

College of Engineering, said he noticed Hudson's compassion when he came to K-State.

"He came across as a very caring and committed individual, both in terms of teaching and in research, especially toward the students, Rathbone said. "He is a very capable young man, and he is able to pull things together. The program was doing well before. Uniformly, we've been very strong on our record, and I feel that we are second to none as far as the Hudson national basis is concerned. I think that Bill Hudson is continuing that tradition."

Hudson's list of accomp-lishments includes work for such corporations as WBH Enterprises Inc. and Lindsay Manufacturing Co. He has also been affiliated with honorariums as Golden Key National Honor Society, Alpha Chi, Phi Kappa Phi, and Tau Alpha Phi.

However, Hudson is all the more humble and credits his success of his recent award to IEEE members.

Stay Cool--

"The award came about because the students are given the opportunity to make nominations and to write letters of support," Hudson said. "I really had nothing to do with it."

Hudson also credits his students for their own success in IEEE, which should lead them to successful careers in engineering.

"They realize that strong student organizations heavily make up the educational process," he said. "I think student involvement in groups is mandatory, because you can't be a good engineer without being a good communicator in a group. The students run this organization. All I do is a little encouraging and guiding every now and then.'

It may have been this attitude that inspired students to nominate

"He's a very good teacher — a student's teacher," said Tim Sanders, senior in computer engineering and IEEE treasurer. "He understands what students are going through and he remembers what it is like to be a student. He lets us do what we want to. He's an adviser. He just tries to steer us in the right direction if we get off

Students have questions on fee payment system

Thousands of students walk through Ahearn Field House to pay their fees each semester. Every time, students question whether the system is working and if changes should be made to help students feel less confused.

Many students thought the fee payment system was confusing and needed to be better organized. However, Pamela Cole, senior in accounting, said fee payment ran smoothly considering the large number of students.

"They do it the best way they can - by labeling everything especially with the mass of students who come through here," Cole said.

Most of the problems that students face during fee payment are delinquencies or financial aid

Steve O'Neil said he wished the financial aid checks could be handled before the day of fee payment. When he called to ask, they told him it had to be done that don't understand why they can't do emergency student loans and fee deferment ahead of time," he said. "I also think it would help to stretch it out over a longer period of time instead of three days.'

One thing that changed this year was the location where parking tickets are paid and permits were purchased.

As of July 1, K-State Police and Parking Services separated. go to Burt Hall. As a convenience to students. Parking Services set up a table at

KELLEE FRENCH and permit

"At least it gave me a

Renee Lee, senior in arts and sciences, said the new location for ticket payment is fine, but she was never notified of the change.

"I had to go all over campus looking for the ticket payment place. I first stopped by the campus police station where the sign said to go to Burt Hall. When I got to Burt Hall they said all tickets had to be paid at the Union," Lee said. "By the time I even got to Aheam to pay fees it had taken 45 minutes to get rid of my delinquencies."

Lee wasn't the only student who was confused by the change. Kellee French, senior in human ecology, said the slip of paper she received when she started through the line at Ahearn said she was delinquent, and listed Burt Hall as the place to pay for all parking tickets.

The amount of time it takes to get through the line is most frustrating, said Kristine Lincoln, junior in English. Before Lincoln could receive the financial aid for which she had waited in line, she film that outlined the regulations for the Stafford loan.

"I was just annoyed at how long it took and at all the lines I had to wait in. First, I had to wait in line at the financial aid table, then I had to wait at the Union to watch the film, then I had to come back and wait in the same line," Lincoln said.

Erin Turner, freshman in physical therapy, said the first time going through fee payment can be confusing with the different stations and numerous lines.

Many students suggested improvements to help the fee payment process, which included getting more people to help at the financial aid station to finding a place for fee payment with air conditioning. Jeff Colwell said a good solution would be to allow students to pay ahead of time.

"The best thing would be to make it so we could pay through the mail - other schools do it," Colwell said.

Other students suggested a shorter lunch break to get people moving faster, an instruction sheet to let students know exactly where to go, more banners explaining the different stations, and more pens at

Even though Kellee French had to wait in line for 30 minutes she said it was worth it.

"At least it gave me a chance to see a lot of people I haven't seen in a long time," French said.

1992 REPUBLICAN CONVENTION

Acceptance speech had something for everyone

Bush is back

After several weeks of sagging poll standings, campaign questions and bad press, President Bush was nominated again as the candidate for the Republican ticket at the party's convention last week in Houston.

Bush had something for everyone in the Astrodome and the huddled masses in front of televisions across America in his nomination speech. No political stone was left unturned.

He said he regretted his 1990 decision to raise taxes after he had promised the American people they could read his lips: no new taxes.

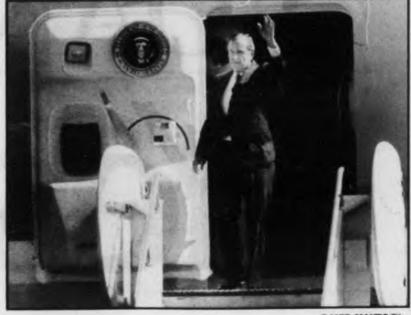

"Two years ago I made a bad call on the Democrats' tax increase. I underestimated Congress' addiction to taxes. With my back against the wall, I agreed to a hard bargain: One tax increase one time, in return for the toughest spending limits ever."

Abortion was not nearly the mum subject at the GOP convention as it was at the Democratic National Convention in New York last month. Some speakers were actually able to express their disagreement with the party's prolife platform. Bush, however, held the line.

"I happen to believe very deeply in the worth of each individual human being, born or unborn, " he Bush said many of the country's problems could be traced to the 'gridlock Democratic Congress." Though many Republican speakers at the convention invoked the name of the late president Harry S. Truman, the theme of the week was "Throw the Democrat bums out. It's their fault."

"It wasn't always this way," Bush said. "I served in Congress 22 years ago. Back then, we cooperated. We didn't get personal. We put the people above everything President Bush debarks from Air Force One in Topeka during a visit to support the campaign of former Gov. Mike Hayden.

The buzzword issue of health care made its way into nearly every speech, but Bush was perhaps the toughest on the issue. He said Clinton's plan for a national healthcare program would actually decrease the quality of the nation's health-care system.

"We don't need my opponent's plan for a massive government takeover of health care, which would ration health care and deny you the right to choose your doctor," he said. "Who wants a health-care system with the efficiency of the House post office and the compasssion of the KGB?"

Though many Americans and a great deal of the press have criticized Bush for his attention to foreign policy and his inattention to domestic issues, Bush said he did it for Americans.

'As if it didn't matter that school children once hid under their desks in drills to prepare for nuclear war," Bush said. "I saw the chance to rid our children's dreams of the nuclear nightmare, and I did. ... I seized those opportunities for our kids and grandkids, and I make no apologies for that."

Bush said Clinton was so wishywashy on the issues he has been seen in "more places than Elvis Presley." The president also invoked the name of the King for "tax-and-spend" Clinton's economic plans.

"If he gets his way, hardware stores across America will have a new sign up: 'Closed for despair.' Bush said. "I guess you'd say his plan really is 'Elvis Economics.' America will be checking into the 'Heartbreak Hotel.'

Bush's speech ended a week of Republican partying that led to his nomination for the presidency. But even though he received nighuniversal accolades by the Republicans at the convention, he wasn't received well by all.

Members of ACT UP (the AIDS Coalition to Unleash Power) posing as reporters infiltrated a Republican National Committee Gala Luncheon at which Bush spoke earlier in the week and chanted "What about AIDS?" at the president.

Bush's nomination now official

ED SKOOG

Republicans chose their presidential candidate last week in a Texas baseball stadium, accompanied by an indoor fireworks display.

President Bush became the official candidate Thursday night at the 1992 Republican National Convention in the Houston Astrodome.

In his acceptance speech, Bush deflected criticism away from his administration and toward the Democrat-controlled Congress, calling it a "roadblock at the other end of Pennsylvania

The convention began Monday with adoption of the platform, a 123-page formal declaration of goals and policies endorsed by the Republican Party. Many political observers consider it to be much more conservative than previous platforms.

Despite a fight by pro-choice Republicans, the platform is bluntly pro-life, supporting "a human life amendment to the Constitution. We believe the unborn child has a fundamental individual right to

Many Republicans wore buttons in the Astrodome that read "71% Can't Be Wrong," referring to a pre-convention poll which found a large pro-choice sentiment within the party. Even First Lady Barbara Bush, who spoke Wednesday night after Marilyn Quayle, said before the convention that "pro-choice or pro-life ... this issue has no place in the platform."

Mike Aylward, a 1987 K-State agronomy graduate, served on the platform committee and the subcommittee on land, food, and resources. Aylward suggests the fight to include the abortion plank may have hurt the platform overall. "I think there were a few people put on (the platform committee) because of one certain issue,

Junction City drug problems magnified by shooting

ASSOCIATED PRESS

JUNCTION CITY - Sitting at the cross-section of an Army base, K-State and an interstate highway, Junction City has become a magnet for drug dealers and crime.

In a revelation of that dark side, a county drug prosecutor was shot Aug. 11 in a brazen act of violence that stunned residents and made headlines nationwide.

But the shooting of Eric Stonecipher by a masked gunman was not an isolated incident - it merely served to remind residents of how far the city has to come to overcome its problems.

Downtown shoppers complain about drug dealers roving outside stores during evening hours. Residents with no interest in drugs tick off the locations of city dope houses. Soldiers and teen-agers boast they can make a drug buy within 20 minutes.

"You can't even be safe in your own house," said Paula Fortner, 17. "You don't walk alone in this

At a news conference last week, Stonecipher said Junction City's surroundings make the city vulnerable to the violence of the drug trade.

'We've got a multimillion dollar payroll every month going through Junction City from the Army base, not to mention the problems you have from 20,000 college students and dependents," he said. "You've got a transient community and an awful lot of money from the government going through here. An awful lot of disposable income.

'We've had Jamaicans, (drug dealers from) Detroit, New York, Los Angeles, Panamanians. We've had them all through here. They're here because it's profitable."

Fort Riley boosts the population of 18- to 25-year-olds to unusually high levels. And K-State in Manhattan supplies another 20,000 college-age people.

Furthermore, police say Interstate 70 is a pipeline for illegal narcotics. The highway goes through Junction City. In the last year, violence surrounding the city's drug trade has increased with two drug-related murders and a war between Detroit and Jamaican drug rings.

Former Junction City Police Chief Jerry Smith said conditions the Stonecipher shooting.

"It was just a matter of time," said Smith, who retired last month after 13 years as chief. "It was going to happen."

In 1990, Geary County ranked third statewide with a rate of 77.6 serious crimes per 1,000 people. The ranking dropped to 10th last year during the Persian Gulf war, when soldiers left the area for the first part of the year.

Twenty-six percent of all inmates sent by Geary County to state prisons have been convicted of a drug offense, according to a grant application the county filed this year. That is more than any other a 10-month reporting period in 1988 and 1989; there were 87 such arrests. During a similar period in 1991 and 1992, arrests stood at 145. 'It's unbelievable, isn't it?" said Danny Jackson, a detective with the Geary County Drug Task Force. 'The problem is more under control now than it was maybe a year ago. But I don't think it's under control,

Allen says he may marry his lover

ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK - Woody Allen says it's possible he'll marry the adopted daughter of his lover for 12 years, Mia Farrow.

Allen told Newsweek magazine that his relationship with Soon-Yi Previn began when he took her to a New York Knicks pro basketball game a little more than a year ago. Until then, he said, he "never had any interest in her at all."

Allen told the magazine last week that the two went to another game about a month later and 'gradually over a period of time a strictly talking relationship developed," he said.

"Only long after the relationship with Mia was finished did it very gradually drift into an intimate relationship," the filmmaker said.

Asked if marriage is a possibility. Allen replied: "Possible, uh-huh."

Allen is 56. Previn has no birth certificate but is estimated as being between 19 and 21. She was born in Korea and adopted from an orphanage in that country by Farrow and Andre Previn, the pianist-conductor who was Farrow's husband at the time.

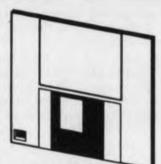

Allen has been married twice: to Harlene Rosen, his high school sweetheart, and actress Louise

Soon-Yi Previn gave a statement to Newsweek, saying of her relationship with Allen: "I admit that it's offbeat, but let's not get hysterical."

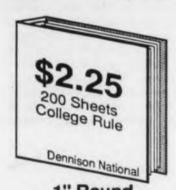

Allen confirmed the romance after he sued Farrow about 10 days ago for custody of their biological son, Satchel, 4 1/2; their adopted son, Moses, 14; and their adopted daughter, Dylan, 7.

Connecticut and New York authorities were investigating allegations that Allen had sexually abused Dylan. Allen's publicist, Leslee Dart, said Sunday that Allen voluntarily met with New York child-welfare officials last week.

Convention draws protests

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 12 and that was their main interest, so a few of them didn't know about the other issues," he said.

He said he was very pleased with the planks concerning agriculture.

"We have seven pages addressing agriculture whereas the Democrats have just one or two paragraphs," he said.

While some Republicans mildly protested the platform, more vocal protesters gathered in a public park across from the Astrodome.

Members of ACT UP, the National Abortion Rights Action League, and the National Organization for Women demonstrated periodically during the convention in the park east of the Astrodome.

Protesters demonstrated against the Bush administration's policies toward Iraq, Serbia, and Israel.

Bill Maris, a POW-MIA protester from Alabama, said, "We're mostly Ross Perot supporters. We wouldn't be here if he hadn't quit."

The protesters seemed mediaconscious, and there were allegations that photographers prodded two teen-agers Thursday candidate will be in 1996. night to burn a flag. The teen-agers were taken into custody by mounted police officers in riot gear.

"Those kids didn't intend to do it," Maris said. "They weren't gonna do it until he (a photographer with press credentials around his neck) threw them a lighter."

Houston police closed the park at 11 each night, always before the convention recessed.

"We didn't see much of the protesters," said Kansas Delegate Lila McClaflin of Tecumseh.

The convention seems to have increased the ticket's standing in the polls. According to Sunday's New York Times, Democratic candidate Bill Clinton's lead over Bush has been chopped down from 20 percent to 8 percent.

Heavy media exposure of a highenergy event is one reason for the increase, according to Kansas Delegate Lila McClaflin. Describing the frenzied nature of the convention, her husband, Don, said, "It's like junior high kids at a senior high basketball game."

Although perhaps premature, conventioneers have already begun speculating who the party's

Most of the speculation, welcome or not, was directed at convention speakers.

Unsuccessful 1992 nominee and columnist Pat Buchanan spoke Monday night and called for "the Buchanan Brigade...to come home and stand beside George Bush."

Buchanan's choice of the word beside" instead of the traditional 'behind" may indicate the support Buchanan gives to Bush is tenuous.

Tuesday's keynote speaker Phil Gramm, Texas' junior senator, was the subject of much 1996 speculation, as were Housing and Urban Development Secretary Jack Kemp and former Secretary of Labor Lynn Martin.

Quayle's acceptance speech continued the family values theme.

"When family values are undermined, our country suffers,"

Kansas Sen. Bob Dole introduced President Bush, in a night which included speeches by Vice President Dan Quayle, former President Gerald Ford and "The Star Spangled Banner" sung by Tanya Tucker.

The citywide raid yielded $20,000 in cash, 15 pounds of marijuana with a $40,000 street value, cocaine valued at $2,000, six cars valued at $30,000, rifles, shotguns, handguns, pagers, telephones and drug paraphernalia.

Members of the Kansas Bureau of Investigations, Kansas Highway Patrol, RCPD and K-State Police participated in the raid.

"Some of the agents had been involved since January, when the department picked up some drug activity," Gee said. "We worked together three months and built cases up on surveillance.'

ONE DAY TO LIVE

From the deep underground of what was then known as the Soviet Union, we are proud to bring you the finest in Russian soap operas. This particular one (called "One Day to Live") has been the No. 2rated show (trailing only "Mr. Belvedere" in Eastern Europe and the former Soviet Union for the past three years.

What we are going to do is, right after we obtain a copy (legally, of course) of a day's showing, we are going to give you the rundown on what happened on that particular day. If you are worried about missing a day, don't worry. It is perfectly legal to photocopy each and every episode because we have the written consent from the commissioner of major-league

You'll quickly realize some subtle differences between Russian soap stars and their American counterparts - namely personal hygiene, language, culture, etc. Always remember that the names of the people who star in "One Day to Live" have been changed to protect their identities, and any similarities are merely coincidental. Therefore, if you want to sue me because your parakeet has the same name as Vladimir Groinpull, tough mule muffins.

Pick up the Collegian tommorrow for another exciting episode of ONE DAY TO LIVE.

Alcohol offenses increase with students' arrival

BY THE COLLEGIAN STAFF

Students arrive in the fall, and the police get busy.

The number of incidents of driving while under the influence, minors in possession of alcohol, and assaults in Riley County increase when students return to campus, compared to the summer

"It may be the simple fact of per capita," K-State Investigator Richard Herrman said. "There are more people here during August through May than during May through August.'

According to K-State Police Department keyboard operator Annette Boddy, 10 DUI's occurred from August 1991 to May 1992, compared to only four during the summer. Seven minors in possession occurred during the year and one during the summer, and 35 assaults during the year compared to five during the summer.

"When you crowd 20,000 people into a community, there are more people having more accidents and more people drinking and taking advantage of the bars," Herrman said. "It's sheer numbers. It takes a party here, a party there, and people say 'Oh, the students have broken loose.

Even though there is a larger number of people inhabiting Riley County during the school year, K-State students aren't the only factor in the increase in the numbers of reported incidents.

According to the Riley County Police Department, students aren't the only ones involved. The largest group is in their late teens and early 20s and is statistically anticipated to be the largest group of offenders and victims.

Herrman said he agreed that students aren't the only offenders.

"Local kids want to get into the action," Herrman said. "The single military sect also wants to pick up on the action."

To help lower the numbers, Herrman said he feels that local businesses, especially the ones catering to the drinking students, need to be more cautious.

MEGAN MULLIKIN

After 15 years as Division of Biology director, Terry Johnson has resigned. However, he is not leaving K-State or many of the department's programs, and he's not even leaving his office.

Johnson said a mixture of personal and professional reasons was why he decided to step aside as "In the 15 years I've been here, the job has grown enormously complex. We've continued to add large global programs, and it's very

The University has decided to split some of the administrative tasks and restructure the division. Johnson will continue to oversee the University's Center of Basic Cancer Research, the National Aeronautical Space Administrationfunded BioServe Technologies, work on his own research and teach.

Professor Jerry Weis will be interim director and will handle the faculty, hiring, rooms and facilities along with many other duties. Weis said he will be responsible for charting the course for division's change with all the added programs.

"I've seen this place grow. When I came here, the department didn't really exist, and today it is a very exciting place to be," Weis said. Johnson said the best thing about the new position is that he will have time to focus on several issues he was unable to concentrate on Johnson in the past.

"The most positive thing is that I can get involved with my own scientific career and my own spend on new ideas for the cancer center and the space center." Johnson said. "I'll be able to be focused without being pulled in so many directions."

In recent years, Johnson has received support of more than $6 million from the National Cancer Institute, American Cancer Society, the Office of Naval Research.

NASA and the Wesley Foundation. Not only has Johnson raised money for cancer research, he has done a lot of his own research. He helped originate the coloring book "Dr. Waddle," which explains cancer to children. He has been honored for outstanding teaching capability and was named distinguished professor in 1989.

The quarterback question

have managed to claim since 1970. And the six-game home winning streak is unmatched for 69 years. But this is 1992.

Snyder and the Cats are only looking ahead. According to Snyder, dwelling on the past can only hurt the future.

When you start to believe all the hype," he said, "the boat starts going backward, and it's hard to get the brakes put on.'

But before the Cats can punch the accelerator, some questions need to be addressed.

First and foremost is the question that seems to be a staple in the Bill Snyder era. Who is going to throw the football?

This year's controversy revolves around junior Jason Smargiasso, who was beat out a year ago by Paul Watson in a Garber, who did not throw a pass in the 1991 campaign.

But Garber and Smargiasso agreed that this year's quarterback battle is different.

"It's not a dog-eat-dog situation," Smargiasso said. "I like Matt a lot, and we help each other all the time. It's a good situation." And a situation that Snyder hasn't yet made a decision about. "We just want to get the very best player on the field as quickly as we can," he said. "We'll make that decision when it's evident." The void left by injured 1,000-yard rusher Eric Gallon is another situation staring Snyder in the face. But preliminary looks at sophomores J.J. Smith and Leon Edwards and freshman Bryant Brooks have alleviated some early "We were awfully pleased with Smith, Edwards and Brooks," Snyder said. "I feel pretty comfortable about that situation."

Nevertheless, the question

"Eric is doing very, very well," Snyder said. "He's making consistent progress. But the prognosis is day-to-day. I can't put a return day on him."

And finally, the Wildcats have to replace the receiving trio of Michael Smith, Frank Hernandez and Russ Campbell. When these Wildcat legends graduated in May, they took with them a combined total of 1,594 receiving yards.

But Snyder said what the new receiving corps lacks in experience, they may well make up for in talent.

Both senior Gerald Benton and junior Andre Coleman have speed and agility. Sophomore tight end Brian Rees has both the size — 245 pounds — and the soft hands that made Campbell such a great

"They have ability," Snyder said. "They haven't been on the field as much, but they're far quicker this year than ever before. I was really pleased with their progress this spring."

The Wildcat defense, which a year ago became only the second team in the last three seasons to hold the Colorado Buffaloes to 10 points or less, has become one of the most feared in the Big Eight.

The 1991 Cat defense allowed its fewest yards and points in nine seasons. The team allowed just 17.3 points per game in Big Eight play.

And considering eight starters from last year's squad will return for the 1992 campaign, this year's team promises to be even better.

The progress of the Wildcats, who just four years ago were 0-11, has not gone unnoticed.

For the first time since 1982, the Cats will get national exposure via a Nov. 5 ESPN game at home. A record five games will be televised during the season. "I appreciate that, and I'm

K-State police officer arraigned

"He's never been involved in any criminal activity of any kind. He has been a member of law enforcement for over 25 years."

Harry Woodruff waits to board a van to the Riley County Jail after his arraignment Monday in District Court.

Bond set at $7,500 for man charged with 4 counts of taking indecent liberties

STEPHANIE FUQUA

He sat quietly in the courtroom, speaking only to his attorney. Harry Woodruff was dressed in the orange jumpsuit of prisoners, and his feet were shackled as he waited for the judge.

Woodruff, 47, has been a police officer for more than 20 years, but he experienced the other side of the law Monday when he was arraigned in Riley County District

The suspended K-State officer was charged Saturday with four counts of taking indecent liberties with a child. Bond was originally set at $7,500, but today District Judge Harlan Graham allowed Woodruff to pay part of it and have someone cosign for the rest.

Joseph Knopp, Woodruff's attorney, asked for the bond modification.

"The circumstances are subject to interpretation," Knopp said. "Mr. Woodruff has plans to reside with relatives. He has no assets to pledge. Without the ability to work, he is unable to post bond."

Knopp told the judge Woodruff had no prior record and cited Woodruff's years as a police officer as an example of character.

"He's never been involved in any criminal activity of any kind,"

Knopp said. "He has been a member of law enforcement for over 25 years.

County Attorney Bill Kennedy asked the judge to keep Woodruff from going near his former residence if he were released.

"He should stay away from his former residence except when escorted by a police officer to get clothes and such," Kennedy said.

Graham modified the bailpayment process, but not the

Student drug use decreasing

Drug use has steadily decreased throughout K-State since the late 1970s, according to Bill Arck, director of the Alcohol and other Drug Education Service.

Arck said his office conducts large surveys of students, quantifying all types of drug use, every other year.

There has seemed to be no drastic increase in the use of any drug, Arck said. The trend of alcohol use has remained consistent, around 93-94 percent of surveyed students.

He said he believes cocaine use has been decreasing, while LSD has made somewhat of a comeback, based on his studies.

"Overall-drug usage peaked in 1978-79 and has been steadily decreasing since then, but the amount of other drugs which students are willing to admit to is very small," he said.

In a 1984 survey, Arck noted that 15 percent of the students had used marijuana within the last month, compared to nine percent in 1987 and 5.5 percent in 1989.

Arck said the decrease in illegal drugs is due to a combination of things.

"Laws have gotten tougher, and the majority of society has agreed that drugs are wrong," he

KARREY BRITT

Collegian K-State recently secured its position as the most award-winning university in student landscape-architecture design.

Five landscape-architecture students won four commendations in the annual American Society of Landscape Architects' student design

With four commendations among only 11 awards given this year, K-State holds its rank as first in the nation in total awards. They go to 50 programs that are eligible to compete each year.

K-State's program has more than three times the number of awards given to its closest competitor, and it ranks above such universities as Harvard, Ball State and Cornell.

MANAMA, Bahrain (AP) -The Western allies await Bahrain and Saudi Arabia's approval to send in warplanes that would shoot down Iraqi planes violating a no-fly zone over southern Iraq, diplomats said Monday.

The zone would cover the

Gulf coast prepares for worst

ASSOCIATED PRESS NEW ORLEANS - Residents

from Texas to Alabama prepared Monday for a potentially catastrophic visit from Hurricane Andrew after the deadly storm swept across southern Florida and into the Gulf of Mexico.

More than 1.5 million people living near the coast in Louisiana were asked - or told - to leave.

The storm's next rendezvous with land was uncertain, but forecasters said it would probably be around New Orleans by early Wednesday.

Coastal residents, some burdened with the memories of past killer storms, loaded up on plywood, batteries, flashlights, bottled water and other supplies. Others flocked to inland hotels.

Louisiana Gov. Edwin Edwards urged coastal residents to leave Monday to avoid a rush. Oil companies evacuated hundreds of workers from platforms in the gulf.

The mandatory, or voluntary, evacuation of more than 1.5 million people in 11 Louisiana parishes, including 200,000 in New Orleans, was ordered late Monday, said Brett Krieger, a state emergency official. Response was slow, he said.

The National Weather Service issued a hurricane warning for a 290-mile stretch of coast from Pascagoula, Miss., to Vermillion Bay, La.

In Mississippi, casino boats in Gulfport headed inland on an industrial waterway, and two legislative run-off elections scheduled for Tuesday were postponed. Coastal area schools in Mississippi were ordered closed, and residents of low-lying areas were told to evacuate.

If the hurricane combines with the remnants of Tropical Storm Lester, moving in from the Pacific, there is also the possibility of serious flooding in the Midwest, meteorologists said.

"At this point, all we can do is monitor the storm," Edwards said. "If it hits, there's a possibility it will be one of the worst in recent

THE WRATH Most damage occurred on the OF ANDREW western shore in the Miami area. Hurricane Andrew ripped FLORIDA through southern Florida early Monday morning, causing at least 10 deaths. Winds were clocked at more Force Base was than 160 mph. Almost 1 million people were evacuated from the Florida Keys The resort at gates designed to guard the area from floods. However, computer studies, validated by past hurricanes, show a storm like Andrew would bring widespread flooding throughout the New Orleans area, said Ronnie Jones, a state police spokesman.

The area has only two major roads out, both interstates, and state police estimate a total evacuation would take at least 60 hours.

"We already are likely past that window of opportunity," Jones said.

Change classes with drop/add

■ Drop/add is first come, first served as of Friday.

Friday is the last day to add a class without instructor permission.

Sept. 28 is the last day to drop without a "W."

Students who are trying to get into a class or are just having second thoughts about one they are enrolled in must go through drop/add procedures to change their schedules.

Appointment cards are needed for drop/add through Thursday.

"All our appointment cards were handed out last Friday," said Gunile DeVault, associate registrar. "Students who got one can come on or after the time on their card," she said.

Starting Friday, drop/add is first come, first served. No appointment cards are needed.

Drop/add forms are available at the enrollment center, deans' offices and the registrar's office and must be brought to Willard 217.

After Friday, instructor permission is needed to add any class. This week, permission is also needed in two instances.

"If the class is closed, the students need a class permit form, which they get from the instructor," DeVault said. "Also, they need permission if the line schedule says that permission is required."

There is no deadline to add a class, although the list of signatures needed on the form grows the longer students wait to make the change, DeVault said.

Also, there is no fee to drop/add.

Friday is the last day to add a class without the instructor's permission. Sept. 28 is the last day to drop a full-semester class without having a "W" recorded on transcripts.

The "W" shows that a student withdrew from a class four weeks into the semester, DeVault said.

Sabrina Mercer, junior in architectural engineering, said she dislikes the time it takes to get through the long lines and offered some advice.

'Choose your classes wisely the first time," Mercer said.

"I've been assistant city manager since 1978," Pearson said. "I've worked for three different city managers. The governmental body felt I was qualified and that my experience would be beneficial."

City Manhattan Commission did not conduct a national search or advertise nationally for the position, Pearson said, because the commissioners decided he was what they were looking for.

"In theory, the city manager is the chief policy adviser to the city commission," Pearson said. "He is appointed to the governmental body and carries out all the administration of the city.

K-State is getting its first new fraternity since 1976.

National officers for Delta Chi fraternity will be on campus Sept. 21 to help colonize the new chapter. Greek Affairs Adviser Barb Robel said the campus provides a great opportunity for a new chapter.

"I think K-State traditionally has a strong greek system," Robel said. "It is a good time to get some new blood into the system."

Delta Chi had a K-State chapter from 1965 until interest waned in the 1970s, said Scott Leigh, the fraternity's senior leadership consultant.

But some national leaders decided to recolonize after receiving an invitation from Greek

"We feel like K-State has a great campus for a greek system, and we're excited and proud to be a part of it," Leigh said.

The fraternity has mailed an informational letter to every unaffiliated single male at K-State inviting them to pledge, and it contacted alumni in the area to recruit chapter advisers. Other chapters in the area will be invited to help with pledging, initiation and referrals of eligible men.

According to K-State "I think Kpolicy, a new chapter must State provide traditionally housing has a strong within two years of colgreek onization.

system." Leigh said house details BARB ROBEL such as location will be left up to the new members. The fraternity plans to pledge least a 2.4 grade point average, but Leigh said the most important factor is the individual. "We're looking for guys who will put forth a positive image toward campus," Leigh said.

The fraternity has 125 chapters throughout the United States and Canada with 65,000 members.

KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

IN OUR OPINION

By the Collegian Editorial Board

Some lawmakers doing fine

THE ISSUE

Despite all the bad feelings toward our state Legislature, there are legislators who deserve recognition.

WE SUGGEST

Give the legislators a break. Some are doing the best they can.

Below are the addresses of our local legislators. Give them a call or write them a letter, and tell them your thoughts.

After years of budget cuts and closed classes, some students have deemed the Kansas Legislature a boarding house for the world's most gruesome villains.

Some students accuse legislators of sitting in Topeka with padlocks on a great cash bin filled to the brim.

Other students say they are angry.

And they should be. It's their right to be angry and to voice their concerns.

But, oh, how soon they forget to count their

We cannot assume every legislator within the Statehouse walls is a demon lurking about waiting to drop the wrecking ball on K-State.

Be assured, there are some saviors roaming the hallowed capitol halls, fighting for K-State every step of the way.

Take local lawmakers.

This year, Sen. Lana Oleen, R-Manhattan, was the co-sponsor of a bill that allowed the continuing operation of the Kansas Value Added Processing Center in Umberger Hall.

Oleen and Rep. Sheila Hochhauser, D-Manhattan, took a stand and said they would vote against any new taxes in Gov. Joan Finney's 1993 budget proposal that would affect students greatly. Some of these proposals included taxing home videos, coin-operated laundries and gas.

And Rep. Kent Glasscock, R-Manhattan, stood ready and willing to fight for K-State - as did Oleen and Hochhauser - when the Legislature was faced with an option to pass a budget amendment that would place $18 million in windfall funds into the pot for renovation of Farrell Library.

Oleen, Hochhauser and Glasscock - and other legislators as well - are committed to the causes of K-State and other Kansas Board of Regents universities.

The Value Added Center is here.

We aren't faced with petty taxes that would have taken more money out of our pockets every time we rented a video.

Farrell renovations are $18 million closer to becoming a reality.

Speak out. Unzip your lip.

Get angry, if need be. Tell the legislators exactly what you think.

But, certainly don't forget to give those who deserve it a pat on the back.

K-State suffers from usual overbudgeting

If K-State students believe their fees are high and wish to know where some of this money - as well as some of their state taxes — are going, they might like to know that, nationwide, at universities like K-State, the cost of administration has risen from $1189 per FTE student in 1980 to $1742 per student in 1988. This is the latest year for which data is available, with both figures being in dollars of 1988 purchasing power.

I doubt whether K-State is much different from these national figures.

In this study, these figures exclude expenditures for libraries, student services such as counseling, admissions and placement, the physical plant, and research.

This, as well as related information, has been given to the Collegian staff and has been placed on reserve in Farrell Library under my name with the title "Bloated Administration."

Beware: The GOP is run

any substantial portion of the Republican National Convention last week probably remember hearing the Republican Party hailed as the "Party of Lincoln."

It may be true that today's GOP was founded on the conservative ideals of Abraham Lincoln, But what shouldn't be forgotten are the contributions of 20th-century right-wingers that are just as much or more a part of what the country has become today.

The two Republicans who can take the most credit for the evolution of this country into its present state are Joseph McCarthy and Richard Nixon.

Sen. McCarthy, fortunately for anyone claiming to be right-wing, doesn't get nearly the attention from high-school textbooks that a man who almost evoked an American fascist revolution deserves.

McCarthy was the chief investigator of the House of Representatives Un-American Activities Committee in the early 1950s. He is probably most noted for his 1950 speech in Wheeling, W. Va., where he proclaimed to a Republican Women's Club that he had Communists currently working in the U.S. State Department.

From that point until his political demise in 1954, McCarthy captivated the media and public by calling before his committee a multitude of government officials, entertainment industry members, press, private citizens whom he regarded as Communist subversives. His accusations were more often than

ENGLER not reckless and unfounded, ruining the lives of many innocent people who came before him. More important than his immediate victims, though, is the legacy of patriotic paranoia he developed and nurtured in this country. A Gallup Poll taken at the height of McCarthy's reign

Those individuals who watched in his possession an extensive list of in 1954 suggested that 50 percent of Americans approved of McCarthy and his methods Richard Nixon, who was also a member of HUAC during the Red Scare years as well as a close associate and supporter of McCarthy's, exploited this paranoia all the way to the presidency. His staunch anti-communism remains a rallying point for the Republican ranks.

But Nixon is remembered by most Americans for something far different than being tough on communism: that of being a buffoonish liar.

Nixon's political life was lived under the assumption that liberals, both in government and media, were out to get him - to ruin him and what he stood for. That paranoia ultimately manifested itself in the Watergate scandal. McCarthy cultivated the noxious seeds of patriotic paranoia that would eventually flourish and epitomize the Nixon regime.

Watergate left the public completely disenchanted with the political system a state it has often been in since Nixon was pardoned by another Republican, Gerald Ford.

Pat Buchanan and George Bush, arguably the two loudest GOP voices, were respectively a top Nixon speech writer/aid and the chairman of the Republican National Committee during the Watergate scandal.

Do the Republicans try to remove themselves from the crimes of their past? Not hardly. A film shown to the Republicans in Houston before Bush's nomination acceptance speech portrayed Nixon in the same positive light as Franklin Roosevelt and John F.

The Republican themes brought forth at this year's convention once again play on the paranoia element of American thinking that was revealed during the Red Scare. The focus has merely shifted. The enemies of America are now unwed mothers, rap singers, drug users, environmentalists, and homosexuals.

John Adams, the second president of the United States, once said, "There was never a democracy that didn't commit suicide." If Adams's warning becomes reality, then it will have been 20th-century conservative Republicans who have again armed America with the blade of paranoia for which to slash its wrists.

Search for pleasure must have limits

"While death is all around us, let us nurture pleasure -for pleasure is life." - Judith Levin

The above quote comes from the September/October 1988 edition of the Utne Reader. It is but a small sample of the quite vehement and radical views of Judith Levin, concerning the status of morality and sexual freedom in the United States. Hers is a position in which we find encouragement to embrace immoral sexual pleasure, despite the growing threat of the AIDS epidemic. Rather than consider the possibility of abstinence or the binding "chains" of monogamy, she would challenge death for the sake of preserving ecstasy through her self-styled morality of pleasure supreme.

Levin says it is better to seize every opportunity for pleasure than to be intimidated by monstrosity known as AIDS.

It is neither my purpose nor desire to argue against sexual pleasure. Sexuality and pleasure are intrinsically good. Now in saying that, I do not condone or endorse promiscuity. I believe there are moral principles which are universal to humanity. So what am 1? Some sort of moral crusader?

You bet! I want people to know there are options to promiscuity, no matter how it has become manifested. A rich diet of sexual experience is not the end-all be-all of becoming a complete human being.

SCOTT

Sexuality is meant for more than one-night stands, the cash profits of Playboy, Playgirl or any other so-called "adult entertainment" entrepreneurs. Sexuality is meant for more than prostitution, wet T-shirt contests or even bikini contests. (The list goes on.)

Sexuality is certainly not to die for. But that is what Levin and her cohorts would have us believe. They may as well just come out and say "Take a chance, it's worth it." Sex today, grave tomorrow. Levin's voice sings out to the hapless who would follow her sex ethics, leading them to the chopping block of "sexual freedom."

AIDS, or any other sexually transmitted disease for that matter, should not be used as a scare tactic to force individuals into celibacy or eternal marriage. These are to be sought out in the beginning, so that we may live free from clinics and these diseases.

I suppose some will not learn from the harsh lessons which others have become subjected to - even to the point of death. Perhaps there will be some like Levin, who will continue to pursue pleasure as an act of defiance against the deadly AIDS virus. If you are one of these, who knows? Maybe you will live to tell about it. Then again, maybe not.

RIO DE JANEIRO, Brazil -President Fernando Collor de Mello may face impeachment on charges of using his office to "obtain illicit profits and benefits," according to published excerpts of a congressional report.

The corruption report was released Monday in Brasilia, the capital, and a request for impeachment is being prepared by the Brazilian Bar Association.

"The facts are disgusting. They speak for themselves," Sen. Amir Lando, the report's author, said Sunday. Advance copies were published in Sunday newspapers.

Collor, who denies any wrongdoing, is frantically trying to marshal enough congressional votes to stay in office - even though polls show up to 70 percent of Brazilians want him gone.

Collor became Brazil's first directly elected leader in three decades when he won the 1989 election on a platform to spur the economy and clean up government. He now faces monthly inflation of more than 20 percent, high unemployment and popular unrest. The charges stem from evidence linking him to the illegal activities of Paulo Cesar Farias, his close friend and campaign treasurer.

very focused and determined group. This team is not same book as last year's."

PATTI HAGEMEYER

The net will be filled with new faces this year

STEVE ROCK Collegian

The Wildcat volleyball team will enter the 1992 season with six new players, a new coach and even from the something it was previously lacking — a sense of confidence. "This is a very focused and determined group," said secondyear coach Patti Hagemeyer. "This team is not even from the same book as last year's.'

Hagemeyer, who guided her squad to a 10-19 record a year ago, including 1-11 in league play, saw five of her players quit the team during the 1991 regular season.

The players' decisions to leave the team, Hagemeyer said, were based on their acceptance of mediocrity. Hagemeyer said she wanted her squad to excel and not all of the players were ready for the

"It wasn't a surprise to me that they quit," she said.

But doesn't the chance of a repeat of last year worry the coach

"It would never happen," Hagemeyer said. "It's really not an issue anymore. This team challenges each other to do better. They are very interested in turning things around. They don't like to lose." The 1992 Wildcat spikers are indeed a new team. Only five players will return from last year's squad Joining them will be six freshman players and a graduate assistant coach who played under Hagemeyer at Southern Illinois University. Lori Simpson, who played at SIU as recently as last year, will assist Hagemeyer in coaching the young squad.

"I'm a firm believer in kids and athletes with a desire to excel," Hagemeyer said.

"She (Simpson) is a person that works extremely hard. She's been a very positive influence on the team," she said.

During her 1991 season as a senior at SIU, Simpson earned the player of the year award and was a first-team, all-Gateway Conference selection. She set the school record for digs in a season and was named the conference player of the week three times.

The experience and the skill Simpson brings with her to the team are valuable commodities, Hagemeyer said.

'Lori can pass along some insights on what it's like to be an athlete," she said. "Physically, she's very talented and very strong.'

Simpson, who wasn't part of the staff a year ago and thus missed much of the turmoil, said she is excited to be a part of the Wildcat

"It's a good program - an enthusiastic program," Simpson said. "I am very excited to see a team like this. The freshmen came in ready to work hard, and so did the upperclassmen. They have the potential to be up in the top of the Big Eight this year.'

If that is to happen, Kathy Saxton, the sole senior on the squad, may have to assume a leadership role once again and guide the young spikers, Hagemeyer said.

During the 1991 campaign, Saxton received honorable mention all-Big Eight status for her performance. She led the Wildcats with 300 kills and 46 aces. She also had 218 digs - good for third on the team.

"Last year, Saxton got her first taste of the leadership role,' Hagemeyer said. "She no longer waits for someone else to make the first move - she just does it. Kathy will have a great year."

And that may be important on a team that has six freshmen. But that lack of experience doesn't necessarily concern Hagemeyer.

"It's hard for players to integrate that fast," she said. "But it happened in the preseason. We had a great preseason."

The regular season will begin Sept. 4 with the Stroh's Light/Continental Inn/Best Western Invitational in Manhattan.

Sport heads need some lessons in geography

The National League needs some remedial

Baseball Commissioner Fay Vincent almost had the Chicago Cubs and the St. Louis Cardinals in the National League West and the Atlanta Braves and the Cincinnati Reds in the National League East.

This, according to Vincent, was in the best interest of baseball.

It should have been done when the National League split into geographic divisions in 1969. Someone in the league office must have flunked U.S. Geography 101 to put the Reds and Braves in the West.

Someone else must have failed the course in the National Football League. In some way or another, these teams are in the wrong geographic

■ The Atlanta Falcons, who play in the Eastern time zones, must travel to the West Coast to play the San Francisco 49ers and the Los Angeles Rams.

■ The 49ers and the Rams must travel to Atlanta and New Orleans to play the Saints, who are in the Western Division. The Phoenix Cardinals are in the Eastern Division, which means they have to travel to play the New York Giants, the Philadelphia Eagles, and Washington Redskins. The trio must travel to Phoenix

NFL Commissioner Paul Tagliabue should persuade owners and the Players Association to realign the divisions in the American and National

With the chance of expansion in the league, I will add St. Louis, where the Cardinals used to play, and Charlotte, N. C., to the list, since both cities have invested time and money to bring NFL team to their metropolitan area.

In the National Conference Eastern Division, the Giants, the Eagles, and the Redskins stay. Coming in are the Tampa Bay Buccaneers and the Detroit Lions from the NFC Central division.

The NFC Central would include the Chicago Bears, the Minnesota Vikings, and the Green Bay Packers. The Falcons and the Saints would join the conference.

The Dallas Cowboys, the Cardinals and the expansion St. Louis team collect with the Rams and the 49ers to make up the NFC West.

For the American Conference, the Pittsburgh Steelers move to the AFC East to replace the Indianapolis Colts. Steelers would battle the Buffalo Bills, the New England Patriots, the New York Jets, and the Miami Dolphins for the conference title. The Cincinnati Bengals and the Cleveland Browns remain in the AFC Central. The Colts, the expansion Charlotte team, and the Kansas City Chiefs realign to the AFC Central.

Finally, the Los Angeles Raiders, the Seattle Seahawks, the San Diego Chargers, and the Denver Broncos remain in the AFC West. The Houston Oilers join the group.

The change would make the NFC East and the AFC East the toughest divisions, suggested by last season's record and team history.

The NFC East has two division winners from last season's records, the Redskins and the Lions. The Giants have won two Super Bowls and the Eagles have appeared in recent playoff games.

The AFC East shows every team has gone to the Super Bowl - three of the five teams have won it. Putting the Steelers on the schedule would make it harder for teams to win the conference title, even if the Steelers aren't up to par.

Defense says brutalization led to crime spree

ASSOCIATED PRESS

TOPEKA, Kan. - Lisa Dunn, charged with murder and kidnapping, testified Monday that her brutal boyfriend, Daniel Remeta, would have killed her and threatened to pour battery acid on her if she had attempted to flee during a multi-state journey into

"I still have nightmares," Dunn said of the spree that ended Feb. 13, 1985 during a shootout at a Rawlins County farmhouse.

"Everything he did seemed to scare me more," she said during her daylong testimony. She frequently fought back tears, and at one point Shawnee County District Judge James Macnish Jr. called a break when she broke down crying.

Remeta, the principal instigator of the crime spree, is facing the death penalty in Florida, where he was found guilty of murder. He has been found guilty of four other killings - one in Arkansas and three in Kansas.

Dunn described how Remeta beat her, deprived her of food, raped her and burned her with lighted cigarettes during their trip.

The trial is the second for Dunn on two counts of murder and two counts of kidnapping in connection with the February 1985 rampage that began in Florida and ended in northwest Kansas. The first, in Thomas County in 1985, resulted in a jury convicting her.

"He asked about my concerns and my life," Dunn testified. "He wrote me some poetry."

She also said he told her how he was "picked on" in prison and by people in Traverse City.

She said they, along with Walter, decided to go to Florida to start a new life. Dunn said she thought they would find jobs and stay out of trouble when they started on the trip, but Remeta soon started talking about committing crimes.

Dread Zeppelin to headline Welcome Back Concert

MEGANNE MOORE

Natural progression.

Maybe this was in the mind of Dread Zeppelin's former drummer, Paul Masselli, when he decided to go on a walk in New Zealand earlier this year and never returned. Love and a buffet line.

These things aided in lead singer Tortelvis's recent departure from Dread. He fell in love with his "little missy" and has chosen her, as well as a happy retirement to a buffet line.

A logical progression.

At least according to the new lead singer of Dread, Gary B.I.B.B. (Bastard Impersonating Butt Boy).

Dread Zeppelin will headline the Welcome Back Concert, which begins at 3 p.m. Saturday at Memorial Stadium.

What do band members say about playing in Manhattan as the kickoff for a 100-date U.S. tour to promote the Oct. 6 release of their third album, "It's Not Unusual"?

"It seemed as good a place as any to start off," Gary said. "We're excited to get it going.

The new Dread Zeppelin encapsulates the same thinking and the usual reggae, rockabilly tunes mixed with a new sound.

Disco is back for real this time. And Gary means it.

A pioneer in disco, fresh out of the 1970s, Gary remains a groovin' guy who's out to dance. Or, as he puts it, "cut the rug."

Gary is not new to the Dreads. He grew up with Tortelvis in Memphis, and when Tortelvis Elvis? decided to retire, he asked Gary to take over as lead singer.

"Tortelvis gave all he had, so he asked me to continue on with the band," Gary said. "It was an unexpected change, which is what Dread Zeppelin thrives on."

Crazy rhythms, brakes and New Dread drummer Spice was apparently discovered in a Los Angeles tow yard. Dread guitarist Jah Paul Jo was looking for car parts for his 1970 Cadillac. He auditioned Spice on the spot and asked him to join.

The new Dread Zeppelin. This time around, there's more emphasis on the band. New tunes. Reggae. A shift to disco at times.

And what about that love for

BY TONYA FOSTER

According to Gary, it was as natural a thing as any that he sounds a bit like Elvis. It is a tribute to longtime friend Tortelvis.

"Dread Zeppelin still has the great guitar lines, in tribute to Jimmy Page," said Steve Karas, publicist for I.R.S. Records, Dread's label. "And for the future of the band, this was the best change that could evolve.

"It's a different style of music, true to Dread Zeppelin that fuels

But the Dread performance is not a completely new show.

According to Gary, the live shows won't be much different from the past. He said Dread will stay true to the club scene and smaller audiences, since it's a very

"The new Dread Zeppelin will be a surprise to the public, and it's something we're going to have fun with," Gary said.

Getting Dread to play wasn't exactly easy, according to Kim Harms, Union Program Council special events adviser.

"We were a little low on funds when trying to find a headlining band for the Welcome Back Concert. But we worked out a deal with Dread Zeppelin, and they were really excited to play at KSU," Harms said.

"This year, we're hoping to attract a majority of K-State students, hopefully about 3,000 to 4,000," Harms said. "Since it's earlier in the day, we're trying to encourage students to bring

VIDEO REVIEW

STOP OR MY MOM WILL SHOOT

"Stop Or My Mom Will Shoot" is like a confusing road map. The plot resembles three highways that never connect and leave a person

The trouble starts when Joe Bomowski's (Sylvester Stallone) mother Tutie (Estelle Getty) comes to visit. While she is there, she manages to witness a drive-by shooting and interfere in his professional as well as his private life.

It is the standard light-hearted comedy, if nothing is expected by the viewer. Even a little action didn't spice up this idiotic comedy. The "funny" one-liners were thrown in to keep the story going, but they fail as well.

The laughs are few and far between, but most can be attributed to Getty.

Stallone is a proven box office draw, but face it, he can't do comedy. Figure it out, Stallone, from your last comedic flop - "Oscar."

THE HAND THAT ROCKS THE CRADLE

For chills that will thrill you, rent "The Hand That Rocks The Cradle."

"The hand that rocks that cradle is the hand that rules the world," is the motto Peyton the nanny operates by. Rebecca DeMornay plays a cunning nanny that slowly takes over Michael and Claire's (Matt McCoy and Annabella Sciorra) family.

Peyton decides to manipulate the family after she is convinced Claire is responsible for her husband's death.

The story has substance. It follows a direction and knows where it is going. DeMornay is consistently crafty in her endeavors, a believable psychotic as the nanny from hell.

Foreign films fading in U.S.

ASSOCIATED PRESS

LOS ANGELES - In 1990, the small Italian film "Cinema Paradiso," starring Philippe Noiret, earned more money than the highly touted American release "The Two Jakes," with Jack Nicholson and Eli Wallach.

Just two years later, though, moviegoers are saying arrivederci to cinematic imports. Such movies rarely outperform U.S. titles, and viability of foreign-language films stands in jeopardy.

"It's one of the toughest things in the world to make money with foreign-language films," said Harvey Weinstein, co-chairman of Miramax Films, one of only a few companies distributing such movies.

Indeed, the major movie studios won't touch foreign films, except to some people believe the box-office remake them in English with marquee names.

Wildfires rage on in California and Idaho

ROUND MOUNTAIN, Calif. -Pre-dawn winds blew new life into a 64,000-acre wildfire Monday, rousting hundreds out of their beds and into their cars as the flames jumped control lines in at least two

The five-day-old fire already had destroyed more than 300 homes, and hundreds more were in its path.

"A sheriff's deputy woke us up at 4 a.m. and told us, 'Hey, Get out! The fire's coming!'" said Dave Buddy, 43, who lives near Oak Run in Shasta County.

In Idaho, meanwhile, firefighters took advantage of briefly cooler temperatures Monday as they tried to cut off a 257,000-acre fire about 30 miles east of Boise.

They're flanking the sides of the fire, and they're going to try to pinch it off," said Kay Beall, Boise National Forest spokeswoman.

"This cooler weather has helped slow things down a lot, but we still have some erratic winds, so the fire's still moving.'

The Foothills fire reportedly destroyed Idaho's oldest ponderosa pine tree and huge amounts of big game habitat, as well as many deer

Across Idaho, more than 5,000 firefighters continued working on fires that have burned across nearly 320,000 acres of forest and range. About 1,800 people were fighting the Foothills blaze, which entered its sixth day. Crews hoped to contain it by Sept. 6. In California, the five-day-old Fountain fire breached defenses on at least two fronts, but authorities said thick smoke made it hard to say whether the blaze would reach hundreds of homes in subdivisions in its path.

Unexpectedly strong wind from the east gusting to 35 mph pushed part of the 63,000-acre Fountain fire outside a containment line Monday morning, said Mike Weger, a captain with the California Department of Forestry.

The fire destroyed 307 homes when it roared through Round Mountain and several other tiny communities about 200 miles northeast of San Francisco. It has blackened enough commercial timber to build 50,000 houses.

Bulldozer crews cleared 80 miles of lines around the fire, and containment was at 40 percent, the California Division of Forestry said.

But winds of up to 25 mph were expected to worsen Northern California fire conditions in a region bone-dry from six years of Elsewhere, forecasted winds from 25 to 30 mph and low humidity threatened to kick the 6,400-acre Barker fire over containment lines, CDF Capt. Bob Buhrle said.

Collegian

The K-State Phi Alpha Theta chapter, a history honorary, has won the chapter of the year award for the ninth straight year.

Donald Mrozek, head of the history department, said involvement of students other than undergraduates is one reason the program is so strong.

The honorary is also open to graduate students and alumni. The basic membership requirement is a high grade point average in history courses, as well as overall.

"Some students ask themselves what relationship they want to have with history after college," said Mrozek. "Phi Alpha Theta helps people to get a better size of how history helps them view the world. It provides a different tilt to their lives, because the greater the opportunity you get to discuss the events of the world, you get a better feel for what's around you."

Laurence Carver, graduate student in American history and past president of Phi Alpha Theta. said he thinks the chapter won the competition because it was active.

The sheer number and variety of activities that we did was what helped us win," Carver said. "We did everything from having a book sale to visiting the cavalry museum at Fort Riley to sponsoring speakers. We did a lot of service activities to help promote a

"I will allow the bond to be modified," Graham said. "He will pay $1,500 by cash and the balance by signature, so long as he has one other person to cosign.'

Graham also warned Woodruff not to have contact with the alleged

"He is not allowed any kind of contact in any form with the alleged victims in this case," Graham said. "As long as the victim continues to reside in the previous residence, the defendant is not to go about that

Because the charges are felonies, Woodruff was not required to enter a plea of guilty or not guilty to the judge today. He will appear again before Graham Monday, and Graham will set a date for a preliminary hearing.

Woodruff had no comment outside the courtroom.

After the arraignment, Alvan Johnson, director of the Riley County Police Department, responded to allegations that Woodruff once worked for RCPD and left under suspicious

"RCPD has only been in existence since Jan. 1, 1974," Johnson said. "Prior to that, the county had law enforcement through the county sheriff and Manhattan police. ... Woodruff worked from March 6, 1967, and resigned Sept. 1, 1975.

Johnson said he wasn't sure why Woodruff resigned from the Manhattan Police Department.

"To the best of my recollections, he was not asked to leave," Johnson said. "But I was not in a position to have known."

K-State has been ranked first in the nation in the society's competition since 1976.

Students who enter the competition work on their projects for a semester as undergraduate theses. Eventually, the projects become a development of their thesis work, said Robert Page, project adviser and professor of landscape architecture.

The competition is judged by a blind jury, which does not see the students' or schools' names on the projects.

Foreign films face obstacles

and "My Father the Hero" (with Gérard Dépardieu, who starred in the French version).

Experts believe several factors conspire against the imports, including the recession, a tougher video and cable-TV market, a buy-American prejudice and a collapse in cultural sophistication.

"People would rather not read subtitles," said Mitch Goldman, president of New Line Cinema's distribution arm.

Miramax's Weinstein said: "College campuses now want 'Terminator 2.' I saw (Germany's) 'The Nasty Girl' with a college audience, and they thought it was a drag they had to read the subtitles. A whole cinema tradition is being lost in this country."

Without question, the European talent pool has been drained.

Several of the continent's most accomplished filmmakers have been lured by Hollywood's riches and have abandoned their native languages.

'We lost almost our entire audience to the American market," said director Uli Edel, who left Germany for the United States to direct "Last Exit to Brooklyn" and the upcoming "Body of Evidence." "I was amazed when I arrived here that everybody was already here. I mean, (Bernardo) Bertolucci is here," he said.

Drug arrests up, usage down

in the last six years, he said. Again Arck credits tougher laws and education as factors.

"There is no one thing which caused the decreases," he said. "Different things change different people in different ways."

Capt. Allen Raynor, commander of the Criminal Investigations Division of the Riley County Police Department, said statistics can be made to say whatever you want them to say. But Raynor said he agreed drug use is down.

"Just because the police department makes more arrests doesn't mean there is more of a problem," Raynor said.

A recent increase in arrests is not due to a bigger problem, Raynor said. The Riley County Police arrested 33 people under charges relating to drugs in the first six months of this year, compared to 20 in the first six months of 1991.

"We have received a state grant allowing us to establish two detectives working strictly on investigations of illegal drugs.

"Now we're out there beating the bush making it happen (the increase of arrests)," he said. "Our efforts have more than doubled."

Raynor said he believes having a youthful community makes drugs more readily available.

"The average age of people living in Manhattan is around 26 years old. There is the University, and an Army base, and this draws many young people and drugs to the area," he said.

"Our focus is not on casual users. We focus on mainly dealers.

"We have just finished a sixmonth investigation resulting in the recent arrests of quite a few people for dealing drugs. However, we're looking at quality, not quantity," Raynor said.

after graduation. But is worth it, he Mrozek said he disliked history as a high-school student but eventually gained interest as a result of a college history course. He said teachers get students interested in history, but the students who go further into historical studies do it because they want to learn more from the figures in history.

"I suspect that students respond to examples that are closer to them," Mrozek said. "I am sure that there were several who enrolled in the history course that President Wefald taught because he was the instructor, but they stayed in it because it was good. Curiosity will only hold you for about a week."

K-State has been reaccredited for 10 more years by the Commission of Institutions of Higher Education of the North Central Association of Colleges and Schools.

Martin Jischke, accreditation team leader and president of Iowa State University, said the team looks for a well-understood mission, adequate resources and an expectation to continue to accomplish its purposes. He said K-State satisfied all the criteria.

"One of the more impressive things at Kansas State University was the extent to which the students genuinely believed they were getting the kind of education they deserved," Jischke said. "It was really refreshing, and it speaks very highly of the University."

The eight-member team reviewed articles about K-State first, then spent three days on campus last spring to make the evaluation. Jischke said on the third day, K-State President Jon Wefald received a preliminary report highlighting the main points of the visit. He received the final analysis this month.

Wefald said he thought the University would get a good report but he couldn't believe how positive it was.

Good attitudes of students, faculty and administration were what made the report outstanding, Wefald said.

"We have people with caring attitudes," he said. "We try and listen to the students and faculty and we never take anything for granted. The report described K-State as having

HURRICANE ANDREW

Louisiana latest to be storm-lashed

140-mph winds strike coastline, spawn tornado

NEW ORLEANS

NEW ORLEANS — Hurricane Andrew, already labeled the costliest storm in the nation's history, raked the Louisiana coastline with 140-mph winds Tuesday.

Residents roused by scenes of Residents, roused by scenes of destruction the day before in southern Florida, had boarded up and fled.

The storm, blamed for the deaths of at least 17 people in Florida and the Bahamas, was estimated to have caused $15 billion to $20 billion in damages in south Florida. If those preliminary figures hold up, it would be by far the most expensive natural disaster ever in the United States.

Andrew began lashing coastal parishes by nightfall. Bob Sheets, director of the National Hurricane Center, said the doughnut-shaped wall of the storm around the eye had struck the marshy coastland, with 140-mph winds, shortly before 10 p.m.

Grand Isle, Louisiana's only inhabited barrier island, was completely under water, officials said.

A tornado in LaPlace, west of New Orleans, destroyed four houses and caused serious injuries to an unknown number of people inside, said state police Capt. Ronnie Jones. The twister also heavily damaged a doctor's office next to a hospital but didn't hit the hospital, Jones said.

Earlier, hurricane-force winds above 74 mph prevented sheriff's deputies from responding to rescue calls from a stranded 60-foot boat and stalled cars in Terrebonne COAST

Parish south of New Orleans, even though the storm's eye was still about 40 miles offshore, said civil defense coordinator Morris Duplantis.

Lockport, east of Terrebonne Parish, lost power at 7:15 p.m. amid reports of 100-mph wind gusts.

"We've got trees in the road and power outages all over the place. We've got 2,700 people in shelters and more out looking for shelters," Lafourche Parish sheriff's Maj. Sonny Hanson said.

A tum to the north late Tuesday meant New Orleans could expect 100-mph winds and more of the hurricane than previously forecasted, according to the National Hurricane Center. But the city still was expected to be spared a direct hit as the storm moved farther west toward low-lying Cajun country.

The eye, moving just off the coast, was headed for Morgan City, an oil town virtually deserted during the day.

"This swath of damage is going

Enrollment levels off

SHAWN BRUCE

K-State enrollment figures will remain stable for the 1992 fall semester, while other regent schools fluctuated, University officials said Tuesday.

Total anticipated enrollment at K-State, including the College of Technology in Salina, is expected to be about 21,500 students.

University Registrar Don Foster said 17,998 students had registered at K-State as of Aug. 21, the end of fee payment. That represents an increase of only 29 students compared to fall 1991.

Late enrollment is expected to push the figure on the Manhattan campus to about 20,600 students.

Enrollment on the Salina campus is 663 students, compared to 619 last year. Late enrollment is expected to push that figure to between 800 and 900 students.

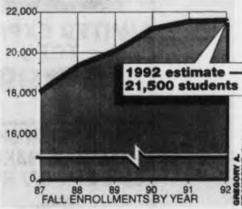

Total enrollment on both campuses for fall 1991 was 21,507

At Wichita State University, enrollment was down 2.9 percent from last year. On Monday, 14,447 students were enrolled, compared to 14,882 one year ago.

This marked the fourth year in a

State grants adjustment

SHAWN BRUCE

Despite an influx of $1.69 million in enrollment adjustment funds for 1992, University officials are continuing with plans to stabilize future enrollment.

Pat Bosco, vice president for institutional advancement, said keeping enrollment at about 20,000 students is key to the future of K-State, at least until the state Legislature budgets more money for higher education.

"We've realized that we're dealing in a period of time in our state where funding is somewhat uncertain," he said. "In many areas, we're about maxed out. We've reached critical

The problem, Bosco said, is that despite coming through with enrollment-adjustment money for this year, the Legislature has failed to deliver all that was promised in previous years.

"I personally feel very betrayed," Bosco said. "Six years ago, we had a very carefully drafted plan that included enrollment-adjustment money.
We have received a percentage of our enrollment-adjustment money, but unfortunately we haven't received the whole amount."

As a result, Bosco said, University officials have been trying to meet an increasing enrollment with fewer

Bill Feyerharm, assistant dean of arts and sciences, said most students have seen the results of the budget crunch in closed class sections.

"We had 80 to 100 students on a waiting list for chemistry," he said. "I don't know how many of them finally got in."

Feyerharm said students were having problems adding classes in other areas as well, especially in the

UNIVERSITY COUNSELING SERVICES

Series could serve needs of students, faculty

University offers weekly lunch series, therapy groups

KARREY BRITT

Faculty and students seeking counseling can attend a new University Counseling Services weekly lunch series this semester.

The series will be from noon to 1 p.m. every Wednesday in the K-State Union on a walk-in basis.

"We try to offer topics the students will be interested in," said Dori Lambert, Counseling Services psychiatrist. "We offer topics that will allow students to get information and their questions answered quickly.'

Topics that have been discussed include dysfunctional families, shyness and questions you have always wanted to ask a psychiatrist.

Listings for this semester's topics will be available Sept. 8 in the Union. Counseling Services also will offer eight therapy groups and at least five workshops this year. Attending a therapy group costs $20 per semester.

The therapy groups include Adult Children of Dysfunctional Families, Eating Disorders, Women in Relationships, Men in Relationships, General Relationships, and Gay and Lesbian Rights.

Attending workshops costs $10 per semester. Workshop topics Anger, Shyness, Responsible Drinking, Students with Disabilities and Adult Children of Alcoholic Families.

"We are hoping to have some workshops on stress management," Lambert said. "We will be having a new career center, which will be a location for workshops on career choices.

Students can have five contacts with Counseling Services for free, with a cost of $8 per contact afterward. Students have the fiscal year from July 1992 to June 1993 to use these contacts.

If students cannot afford these services, they will be referred to services that are provided in the community.

Non-students may consultation services for $40 per hour of consultation time. However, Lafene Health Center will not offer on-going services.

"I encourage everyone to call us for any questions," Lambert said. "The meeting times and places tend to change."

Kansans sign up to campaign for Clinton/Gore

CAMPAIGN '92 INTERNET

The balloons, confetti and speeches are in the past, but some effects of the Republican National Convention are still evident.

Hundreds of volunteers in Kansas signed up to campaign for the Democratic presidential ticket of Bill Clinton and Al Gore during the Republican convention.

Joel Berg, Kansans for Clinton/Gore press secretary, said several hundred people have volunteered to campaign, even though offices in Wichita and Topeka have been open only since Aug. 17.

'A few hundred per office have volunteered here in Wichita and Topeka," Berg said. "The amount of people who came in was in the hundreds."

Patrick Broz, Wichita volunteer, said the number of people was astounding.

"It's incredible," Broz said. "Every day the number grows. I think we've added almost 20

Even a number of registered Republicans in Wichita have signed up for Clinton/Gore.

"We've had a dozen or two," Berg said. "The fact we are getting any is remarkable.

"I think people are disgusted," Berg said. "It's politics as usual, and people want change. There was this whole long convention where they had nothing to say about where George Bush will lead this country. People don't believe what they have to say, especially the vicious and untrue things about Clinton and his wife."

While people may be disgusted, Broz said he volunteered for a different reason.

"I volunteered because I believe in the ticket and I'm tired of 12 years of Reaganomics," Broz said.
"I just graduated from WSU with a teaching degree. I sent out 100 applications and couldn't get a job. It's not because I wasn't qualified but because there aren't any jobs in the teaching field. He's supposed to Alford said the main reason she's for Clinton is because of his pro-choice position.

Alford said she thinks Quayle's abortion stance is elitist.

"He has a possibly racist, elitist stance in that he believes his daughter has the right to choose, but the American public does not," Alford said.

Time for action in Somalia

THE ISSUE

The crisis in Somalia is growing worse with no relief in sight. There is a possibility of millions dying from starvation.

WE SUGGEST

The United Nations needs to take conclus careful steps to rid the country of the roving armed bands causing the starvation and help establish a stable government.

In America, the term "food availability" means how late the corner supermarket stays open. But in Somalia, it is subject to whether a hungry civilian has a gun.

Upwards of 3 million Somalis will die from starvation during the next month. In a sick twist of irony, plenty of food is available. In a sicker twist, more aid arrives in the country's ports every day.

As in Ethiopia during the drought of the 1980s, this food aid seldom gets to the desperately hungry. Unlike in Ethiopia, Somalia's famine is not the result of drought.

It is the result of anarchy, the noble notion spray-painted by 14-year-old punk rockers on the outside walls of supermarkets. Instead of government, the region is ruled by loose bands of 14-year-old rebels with discarded Cold War guns.

Rebels cling to the food, steal it from each other like alley dogs ripping at a piece of rump roast. In the fight, the powerless starve.

Agriculture requires stability. Only with assured protection of land can farmers safely grow crops and graze cattle. Only with a national economy can the product be distributed around the country, let alone be exported abroad.

Food aid drives the price of agriculture products down in surrounding countries, which themselves have shaky economies and governments. Too much aid to Somalia could lead to repeat performances in Ethiopia, Djibouti and Kenya.

It is imperative that the Horn of Africa be stabilized.

International action should not consist merely of care packages. Whether done through the United Nations or the Organization for African Unity, the gangs of armed eighth-graders need to be put down with force, allowing relief organizations to save some lives.

Then, steps towards a responsible government and a sustainable national economy must be supervised to ensure peace and selfgovernment. Central to this would be demilitarization of the region.

It is a cruel stand. But inaction would be akin to genocide. It can be a cruel planet.

Despite freedom, discontent rules after coup

The year since the beginning of the coup has brought us more grief than joy, more problems than knowledge of how to solve them. In general, we lost more than we gained in this year. Except for one thing — freedom. Even if it's not complete, then in any event it's incomparably more than we received in all the preceding seven

Aug. 19, 1991, was the freest day in the history of modern Russia, because Moscow was ready to lie down in front of the tanks - to lie down unselfishly, simply for the idea of freedom, which is more important to life than any ideology. ..

We have all been disappointed by the results of the past year. ... There was no manna from heaven. No golden fruit fell at our feet, and the bosses' chairs are not occupied by the people we dreamed of. ..

And yet, let's once again remind ourselves: There were tanks in the streets of Moscow; there were gun barrels pointed at the people and it failed.

HOBBS, N.M.

Ulterior motives for appointing Baker

President Bush evidently considers his own political fortunes more important than continuity in U.S. foreign policy in a time of global turmoil and opportunity - in the Mideast, in Bosnia, in Iraq, in the former Soviet bloc. How else to explain his decision to yank Secretary of State James Baker back to direct his re-election effort?

Baker will be chief of staff, a position he held under former President Reagan. Officially, he'll be in charge of administrative operations, which surely could use an overhaul.

Unofficially, though, there is little doubt that his chief assignment will be to salvage the Bush campaign. Administration officials suggest that Baker's apparently permanent return - along with several top aides - from the State Department also signals a greater emphasis on domestic issues. That's important, but must it be achieved at the expense of foreign-policy management? Republicans ... are bubbling over Baker's "promotion" to defining Bush's campaign schedule and messages. The rest of the world likely will manage to contain its enthusiasm.

Ideas of true feminism need to be brought to light

the travels from adolescence to adulthood, we have an pulled English language to its vernacular adulthood, we have all pushed the boundaries, experimenting with those fabulous new words hijacked from latenight television or an unusually vocal outpouring from our parents in their moments of distress.

The "f-word," as it is affectionately known, was generally abandoned for more expressive verbal tidbits. Or so I thought. Playgrounds grew into college campuses, bicycles were traded for automobiles, and the "f-word" became "feminist."

Feminism is a woman-centered philosophy, because it is women who must conform to the doctrines set forth by the patriarchal institutions already in place. Being woman-centered does not make feminism anti-man. Nor is feminism saying that men don't have to play out any gender roles of their own. The difference is that determined by the opposite sex.

Feminists are often met with contempt and paranoia. A woman who calls herself a feminist is thought of as a "zany chick who disrupts everything," a "man-basher," or, if all else fails, the question of sexuality is used as a last resort. When one of society's insecurities fails, that being equality for all women and men, we resort to another - homophobia. People assume that you must either hate men or love women if you are a feminist. Like loving women and men are mutually exclusive. More importantly, as if sexuality and preference are even "requirements" for freedom.

For these reasons, many women have found it difficult to label themselves feminist. Fewer than 25 percent of women identify themselves as feminist, but a great majority of women support the ideas that men's roles are not as rigid and are not feminism embraces and struggles to The more women who identify themselves promote. This lack of outward identity has hurt the progress and development of the women's movement.

The fear of identification is only a product of the enemy. To be fearful of how and what society thinks is only to be fearful of ourselves. Our sexuality isn't so fragile that it can be determined or altered merely by another person's perceptions.

KLAWONN

While "feminism" is just a word, there is a need for women to identify themselves as such.

as feminist, the more power women will have in redefining the word and moving forward with the movement. The label helps provide a sense of unity, identity and solidarity.

All women need to speak out against the injustices they face on a day-to-day basis. Ask why there are no women tenured in your department. Or why there are so few women in the University's administration. And why the salary of a woman is only 70 percent of that of a man who has the same qualifications and experience.

This means going to your classes and questioning the absence of women in course material and readings. It requires asking the professor what role women play and what their contributions are.

Demand answers to your questions. You have that right.

In social and political philosophy class last year, the only woman studied was Ayn Rand. Yes, she is a woman, but what we read had little to do with the experience and the injustices faced by women in society. Or in a history of journalism class, the only women mentioned were limited to broadcast journalism, a field where blond hair and blue eyes have become a benchmark of what a woman is within the

To study a woman's writings is not enough. We need to study the woman's experience and perspective. We need to resist the ways of thinking and the material that we are taught.

Now, don't be fooled. There are plenty of women who have made significant contributions in all areas of study, but their stories have either been lost or ignored. It is our job to locate and demand that these women are given equal time and consideration.

Expansion, renovation of Rec Complex to begin

Construction about seven months away

KIP BEASLEY

Collegian

The days of fighting the crowd and the long wait to use equipment at the Chester E. Peters Recreation Complex are limited.

The reality of an expanded Rec Complex came one step closer Aug. 18 with the selection of an architectural firm. The Ken Ebert Design Group of Manhattan was chosen to design and plan the expansion.

"It was the best news I received for the day - for the week for that matter," said Robert Westberg, project manager of this project and architect with TKEDG.

The project will include adding four basketball/volleyball courts, a larger weight and fitness room, an aerobic/multi-activity room, a longer elevated running track, more administration offices and air conditioning for the entire building.

Renovations will also take place. The current weight room will be converted into a table tennis room, and the gym and racquetball floors will be re-surfaced.

Outside, the tennis, racquetball and basketball courts will be resurfaced, and new lighting of the playing fields is included.

In November 1991, students approved the Rec Complex referendum by 81 percent. Funds previously being applied to bonds for the Rec Complex, KSU Stadium and the K-State Union were redirected to be applied to fund the expansion, said Recreational Services Director Raydon Robel.

"The expansion of the Rec Complex has been slow in coming," Robel said. "After students approved the Rec Complex referendum last Nov. 5 and 6, the expansion then became a project of the state. It had to be approved by the Board of Regents and both houses of the Kansas Legislature before an architect could be hired."

The expansion was approved by the regents in December and by the Legislature in late May, Robel said. In June, the state advertised for architectural firms and developed a list of the top five contenders.

The contenders were then interviewed and voted on by K-State representatives, the regents, and the state Division of Architecture Services. Student Body President Jackie McClaskey represented the students' vote.

"We were selected based on our qualifications and our interview," Westberg said. "Having someone qualified and close was important to this project from the beginning. We have been involved prior to this. We were contacted two years ago by the University to develop a possible plan for the expansion of the complex." Robel said groundbreaking and construction of the complex is still about seven months away. During that time, TKEDG will proceed with designing and planning.

KSU Foundation helps fund expansion of Throckmorton

The first step toward private funding of the Throckmorton Hall expansion was put in place by the KSU Foundation.

Kansas Association of Wheat Growers made a pledge Aug. 10 to raise at least $50,000 as a lead gift through their membership.

Construction on Phase II of Throckmorton began this spring, said George Ham, associate dean of the College of Agriculture and expansion project coordinator.

"Private funds will form a fourth of the total funding," said Ham. "We are working with the KSU Foundation to raise these."

The federal government and the state of Kansas each finance a fourth of the funds.

Betty Johnson, constituent development officer of the KSU Foundation Center, said this was the first gift actually solicited by the Foundation.

"We hope to have the $5 million

The greenhouses attached to Throckmorton are a part of Phase II that has already been completed. The two wings (east and west) will almost triple the size of the building to a total of 161,000 square feet, and will house offices, classrooms and research laboratories.

"We expect to occupy the building in the summer or fall 1994," Ham said. "While the contractors were ahead of schedule, the rain this year delayed work."

Thousands pay to hear 'Squidgy' tape

ASSOCIATED PRESS

LONDON- Thousands of people paid up to $22 Tuesday to be titillated telephonically by a recording of an unidentified man's conversation with a woman who may or may not be Princess Diana.

Transcripts of the tape that have appeared in tabloid newspapers since Sunday identify the woman only as "Squidgy," a pet name used by the man.

But several bits of the conversation hint it might be Diana: The woman talks to a child named Harry, and she talks about Fergie - the Duchess of York - and the royal residence at Sandringham, and about her unhappy marriage.

Buckingham Palace said the tape was "inconclusive in terms of voice quality.'

The Sun, the tabloid which published extensive transcripts Monday and Tuesday, made the whole tape available by telephone, charging 95 cents a minute.

The newspaper reported more than 20,000 calls by late afternoon, averaging about five minutes per call. Listening to the entire conversation would cost about $22.

A story in Tuesday's Sun said a ham radio operator, Cyril Reenan, made the tape from an intercepted car phone conversation on New Year's Eve, 1989, and that Reenan turned it over to the newspaper.

'There's no way I want to harm royalty," The Sun quoted him as

The tape is mostly rambling conversations and no proper names are exchanged.

Student's experiment to go aboard space shuttle

Richard Brian Hilgenfeld sees space travel in his future.

Hilgenfeld, senior in premedicine and biochemistry, has spent much of the past year doing experimental research with Rob Denell, professor of biology. Their combined research is based on the effect of gravitational changes on fruit-fly embryos.

Hilgenfeld said experimentation with fruit flies has merited a $5million grant from NASA's Specialized Center of Research and Training for ground-based research.

"I was just looking for work in a lab, so I talked to Rob and told him what I wanted to do," Hilgenfeld said. "He found something for me and said, 'Here it is. Go with it.' I wouldn't exactly call it a job, even though I get paid some money from the grant. I'd probably say it is more of an opportunity."

Hilgenfeld's new opportunity expanded when he was selected by his Public Speaking I class to give his research presentation at the public speaking contest in Nichols Hilgenfeld also had portions of his research published in Transactions of the Kansas Academy of Science.

Hilgenfeld, a Golden Key National Honor Society member, used his presentation research to earn credentials in the society, which has more than 10,000 members.

He was one of three students selected nationwide to participate in the Student Scholastic Showcase during the annual Golden Key Convention in Scottsdale, Ariz., this received a $500 scholarship. Willard Nelson, K-State Golden Key adviser, introduced Hilgenfeld to the convention. "This was a real honor for Richard, and it was also a real honor for K-State," Nelson said. "This was the first time that we had a K-State member give a speech he said he was able to remain calm felt while in the spinning barrel in at the showcase.

"There were people there who were in just about every major, so the most difficult thing I had to do was present it in a way that was simple enough for everyone to understand," he said. "I also had to make it interesting for everyone, so I made an analogy. I explained how the feeling of different levels of gravity in space compared to how it the park."

In December, his fruit-fly experiment will go into space aboard the space shuttle Discovery.

"This is a really good feeling to be able to work in the astronaut program," Hilgenfeld said. "I've got great avenue ahead of me. However, in order to go into space, you've just about got to go on to get your Ph.D."

Originally a business major, Hilgenfeld decided to switch to biochemistry and pre-medicine because of his varied interests.

"I've always been interested in science and was looking for a major of combined interest. This combines math, biology and physics, which all interest me.

ASSOCIATED PRESS

MIAMI - South Florida fought off looting, disease and desperation Tuesday in the wake of Hurricane Andrew, and the storm's dazed survivors jammed roads and formed lines in a scramble for necessities.

Labradors trained to sniff out bodies joined the effort to measure the full devastation left by the hurricane, which may be the nation's costliest natural disaster. One preliminary estimate put the toll at up to $20 billion.

"It's pandemonium," said Thomas Moore, an official at a shelter filled with 70 ill, elderly nursing-home evacuees in the hardhit Richmond Heights area, about 10 miles south of central Miami. One evacuee died earlier, and Moore said everything from medicine to adult diapers was

Federal and state government relief efforts were joined by donations from supermarkets and bottled-water companies, kitchens set up by the Salvation Army and Southern Baptists, and U.S. military field rations.

Andrew whirled across the Gulf of Mexico toward coastal areas in forewarned by scenes in southern Florida.

The storm badly damaged an uncounted number of homes Monday, as well as an Air Force base, Miami's popular zoo, mobile home parks and department stores.

At least 14 people died when Andrew pounded Miami's southern suburbs and nearby farm communities with winds that topped 160 mph. The storm had left three confirmed deaths in the Bahamas on Sunday.

Florida's death toll seemed certain to rise.

"Some bodies are caught in the wreckage, and they have had to be left for the time being," said Jay Eaker, a Federal Emergency Management Agency spokesman in Tallahassee.

The Coast Guard reported finding a man Monday evening aboard a 48-foot pleasure boat. He told his rescuers that two companions were washed overboard in Biscayne Bay, and a helicopter and vessel searched there

Three Labrador retrievers trained in body recovery were sent to the wreckage of shopping centers in Cutler Ridge, a town on the Louisiana, where residents were southern fringes of metropolitan

Miami where authorities suspected being shipped for temporary some people were buried under housing.

Police, bolstered by 2,000 National Guardsmen, promised a hard line against looting as a 7 p.m. to 7 a.m. countywide curfew was extended Tuesday night. Police made at least 200 arrests for looting and curfew violations.

"We will fill the jails up until they're running over," said Detective Donald Blocker of the

Gov. Lawton Chiles set up a command post in a Miami Lakes hotel running on its own generator and said he would direct the government from South Florida until the crisis is eased. He visited more ravaged neighborhoods Tuesday after touring Monday with President Bush.

"These folks need to know we're going to try to help them," Chiles said. "There's some things I think we can do to cut red tape.

Disaster officials said 50,000 people were homeless, with nearly 35,000 still in shelters.

The Federal Emergency Management Agency set up a Miami office to direct relief efforts and take applications for assistance. Some 1,800 mobile homes were plenty of other design options available. "We want this facility to be as flexible of a building as possible," Westberg said. "We are trying to develop the most functional, yet exciting, project that we can."

After the designs are complete with specifications, the state will open bids to construction companies for the contract, Robel said. He expects completion of the expansion to be mid-year 1994.

Expansion of the Rec Complex is much needed, Robel said. About 2,000 students used the Rec Complex daily last year — 430,000 for the year. The current building has 93,000 square feet. The expansion will add another 58,000 square feet and will cost $7.92 million.

"With the expanded facilities, we expect a big impact in the number of people using the complex," Robel said.

Most of the concerns addressed the lack of funds allocated to the University. The report called for improvements in non-competitive faculty salaries, library space and the shortage of state-of-the-art equipment and computing resources for academic and administrative

Athletics fixing debt

FRANK KLEEMANN

The athletic department managed to operate in the black in the 1992 fiscal year for the first time since Department The Intercollegiate Athletics ended the year with a surplus of $265,020 under the guidance of first-year Athletic Director Milt Richards.

In addition to the surplus, the department paid off $330,000 of the capital-improvement debt.

The department has changed its procedure in figuring its maximum credit. Jack Key, assistant athletic director and chief financial officer, said the department could shrink the debt from $5.4 million to $4.4 million through restructuring the cash-flow debt.

'We didn't borrow as much money as we could," he said. "We had enough cash on hand."

The end-of-the-year surplus is a step in the right direction, Richards

"Only 20 percent of all Division I athletic departments operate in the black. So, we're obviously pleased with that announcement," he said.

Richards credited a successful football program and fund-raising

"The football season made about $400,000 more than we planned," Key said, "In fund raising, it's the best we've ever done.'

Ernie Barrett, assistant athletic director, and his team raised a record high of $1.2 million. Key said the department realized most donations would come in small

"I think there are a lot of people out there who have never been asked who would be willing to give K-State athletics money," he said. "It's a whole lot easier to get 10 $40 donors than one $5,000 donor."

On the down side, the men's basketball team fell behind the projected revenue. Key said this was due to low attendance.

And the future possibility of sliding into a deficit has called for reshaping the budget.

"We have a very, very conservative budget," Richards said. "Starting with this month, we're operating with a five-year financial plan. It's based on our best estimate of the picture of the athletic department and will be updated every year."

Key said next year's budget is $8.5 million.

"We're lowering the total budget $300,000, which was accomplished by an 8-percent cut," he said.

The cut's purpose is to save money for the facility projects for the upcoming year, planned and unplanned.

The cut of about $700,000 provided money to repair the R.V. Christian Track for an estimated cost of $250,000, which was scheduled for 1996. The 1998planned infield turf renewing of Frank Myers Field was rescheduled for this year, at a cost of $275,000.

Total project costs for 1992 add up to $865,000 for repairs and installing additional facilities.

The new football press box and football indoor complex cost more than $3 million but will be financed by private donors, Key said.

Wildcat Sprint Triathlon begins two weeks from Saturday; registration still open

FRANK KLEEMANN

Area athletes will compete once again in the KSU Wildcat Sprint Triathlon two weeks from

The course will be in and around the River Pond areas of Tuttle Creek State Park.

This year's triathlon is dedicated to Spencer Willey Gillun, who recently died of sudden illness at the age of 16 months. Gillun was the son of Wildcat triathlon club member Charlie Gillun and his wife, Anne.

The 13.3-mile event, organized by the Wildcat Triathlon Club and the Center for Exercise Research at K-State, starts off with a 0.3-mile swim, continues on a 9.9-mile bike tour and concludes with a 3.1-mile run.

Male and female athletes, who must be at least 15 years old, compete in eight age groups. The five-year age groups start with the 15-19 group and conclude with the 50 and over group.

Race director Jason Bradley, senior in veterinary medicine, said he expects about 120-150 entries from Manhattan, Kansas City, Lawrence and southeastern Nebraska.

The course, changed slightly from last year, is considered moderate and does not give an expert in one event a decisive advantage, Bradley said

"The swim is very dealable for most people, but the athletes have to realize it's an open-water swim," he said. "The bike tour is moderately hilly, with one 'dead dog hill' from the transition area up to the dam. And the run is flat and fast."

The sprint triathlon offers newcomers an opportunity to get their feet wet for future competitions

"It's a very good race to start with," Bradley said. "It gives a base on what the triathlete has to work for the next time."

Besides individual competition, teams of three athletes, one for each leg, can enter the event. All teams - whether male, female or mixed - also compete within separate age groups. "(The reason) to have team competitions is because a lot of people don't have the time to practice for all three events," Bradley said. "A lot of the athletes do a team triathlon first and then switch to individual competitions. The team competition will begin after all individual heats have started, with one heat every five minutes. The men's heat will be first, with all female athletes in the second heat, followed by the remaining men's individual heats.

Race registrations are $25 per individual and $60 per team and will be accepted until Sept. 5. Late entries are welcomed however, from Sept.

6 until race day, at a cost of $35 per individual and $75 per team.

Candidates seek votes by speaking to Legionnaires

Bush, Clinton offer different ideas on service ASSOCIATED PRESS

CHICAGO - Bill Clinton appealed to veterans Tuesday not to oppose his presidential candidacy just because he avoided serving in Vietnam. President Bush pointedly reminded them that when his time came to serve in World War II, "I was scared but I was willing.'

The presidential rivals appeared two hours apart before an American Legion convention. First, Bush extolled his experience as a wartime fighter pilot and commander-in-chief. Then, Clinton tried to bury the controversy about his Vietnam-era draft status.

"You know I never served in the military. You know I opposed the war in Vietnam," the Arkansas governor said. "But I want you to know this. I was never against the heroic men who served in the war.

"If you choose to vote against me because of what happened 23 years ago, that's your right and I respect that," Clinton said. "But it is my hope you will cast your vote while looking toward the future with hope rather than remaining fixed to the problems of the past."

The veterans applauded.

In raising the matter before a group of veterans Clinton hoped to blunt it as a campaign issue. He compared his action to John Kennedy going before the Greater Houston Ministerial Association in 1960 to face head-on the issue of people voting against a candidate because of his Catholic religion.

"If I should lose this election on the real issues, I shall be satisfied that I tried my best and was fairly judged," Clinton said.

Bush, too, used his appearance to defend himself - in the president's case against accusations that he stopped the gulf war too soon rather than sending troops into Baghdad to crush Saddam Hussein's government.

"We are not in the slaughter business," Bush said, raising his voice. "We were in the business of stopping aggression, and I don't like these historical revisions. We did the right thing."

Bush, who also was applauded by the Legionnaires, said his top military advisers as well as Gen. Norman Schwarzkopf, had told him the battle had been won and it was time to stop.

In other campaign developments Tuesday:

- Bush flew to Detroit where he told a rally in suburban Canton that a Clinton proposal to increase car mileage standards would throw American auto workers out of their jobs. Dozens of auto workers protested Bush's visit, waving pink slips to suggest his policies were responsible for layoffs in the Vice President Dan Quayle whistlestopped across North Carolina by train, deriding Clinton as "Tax Hike Bill" and contending he had raised taxes repeatedly in Arkansas and would do the same in Washington.

Al Gore, the Democratic vice presidential candidate, toured a supercomputer center in Columbus, Ohio. He ridiculed Bush's new jobtraining proposal, saying it was designed to save only two jobs those of Bush and Quayle.

In Chicago, both Bush and Clinton lavished praise on the veterans and were well-received in return. Clinton was far more detailed in his promises to support veterans' programs and causes.

Among the Legionnaires, opinion was mixed on whether Clinton's lack of military service and the steps he took to avoid being drafted should be a campaign issue. But there was no mistaking the dissatisfaction with Bush over the administration's handling of veterans' affairs and the economy.

Clinton, saying he owed veterans one final statement on the issue, told the group he got a draft notice in 1969 and was told by his draft board he could finish his school year. He said he then joined an ROTC program to avoid the draft but soon reversed that decision and submitted to the thennew draft lottery, only to draw a high number and never be called.

Republican accusation of Clinton tax increases labeled as misleading by top campaign official

ASSOCIATED PRESS

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. - The latest Republican lines of attack on Democrat Bill Clinton fault the Arkansas governor for raising taxes 128 times - and enjoying it. In fact, the real figure is much smaller.

The Clinton campaign admits to 49 tax increases, including more than $260 million in tax increases for a $2-billion state budget in

The Bush-Quayle campaign's list of alleged Clinton tax increases counts four tax boosts twice. And Clinton supporters say it also includes items the average voter would not consider a tax or an unreasonable fee.

Two of the 128 entries on the Bush-Quayle list are increases in the percentage of bets the state gets

Another lengthened the dog-racing season, which is a tax hike only in the sense that a longer season increases the state's take from

Most of the fees on the list raise little money or target a specific audience. For example, one fee is assessed on people convicted in Arkansas courts.

President Bush, in his speech last week at the Republican National Convention, said Clinton had boosted taxes 128 times and "enjoyed it every time." Vice President Dan Quayle tossed out the same figure on Tuesday as he campaigned in North Carolina, depicting Arkansas as a state of high taxes and low incomes.

Overall, Arkansas ranked 13th among the states in a study of state from dog- and horse-racing tracks. tax bills, and it ranked 45th in local tax burden, according to the 1990 report of the Advisory Commission on Intergovernmental Relations.

> "The list is totally misleading." Betsey Wright, a top aide in Clinton's campaign, said of the Bush-Quayle list. The campaign acknowledges 49 "actual taxes" increased under Clinton, the biggest earmarked for education, health care and roads.

Wright, Clinton's former chief of staff, said Republicans also fail to mention Clinton supported 48 tax-reduction measures.

Records kept by Legislature's staff show that fewer than 30 tax increases supported by Clinton generated about $100,000 a

Laser Zeppelin blends sight, sound into high-tech concert

You could travel to see Disney World or the Academy Awards, but they're coming to McCain Auditorium Thursday night.

Laser Zeppelin is a rock concert without the band.

It entails thousands of laser beams shooting out over the audience as a 10,000-watt Dolby concert system, featuring the famous 30-speaker cabinet wall of bass, bellows out Led Zeppelin

"This is a different show, going after classic rock and fulltechnology to create a different entertainment effect," said Matt Winthrop of Brian Winthrop International Ltd.

The BWI production has been touring laser concerts for eight years and has appeared at more than 500 venues nationwide. The company also specializes in other types of laser shows. "Led Zeppelin was chosen better suited for the laser show. Since we're working with K-Rock (KMKF-FM 101.5) to produce the show, it's more exciting for the students," Winthrop said.

The McCain show features two high-power laser systems with an entire bank of computers and laser

While one laser projects fullcolor laser images on a 500-squarefoot screen, the other lasers shoot beams out over the audience. The beams then hit crystal mirrors throughout the room to form a three-dimensional spider web of lasers, also known as the Star Wars

"The two laserists try to create an exciting new show every time. Some graphics are already programmed into the computer. And other effects - like fog jets and mirror balls - help produce a strong audience response," Winthrop said.

Lasers have become high-tech and more prevalent in the entertainment industry. This will be the first time a touring laser concert will feature an electric screen. During the show, it can be raised up, and the system can shoot fullcolor beams and tunnels out over Audience members wary of lasers being projected above them need not worry. BWI is overseen by the Center for Devices and Radiological Health, a branch of the Food and Drug Administration.

"They have very strict guidelines by which we have to follow, so it is a safe industry. Also, there is very little documentation if it is potentially dangerous since there is a difference between the lasers used for entertainment and those used for clinical purposes," Winthrop said.

The Laser Zeppelin rock concert is at 8 p.m. Thursday in McCain. Tickets are $10 in advance and $12

"Straight Out Of Brooklyn" turns its negatives into positives, and in the process creates a stark. simple story that does something few films nowadays accomplish. It makes you think.

Filmed and set in Brooklyn's Red Hook housing projects, "Straight Out Of Brooklyn" is the story of the struggling, blackworking-class Brown family caught in the vortex of trying to survive.

Ray Brown, played extremely well by George T. Odom, is a father whose desire for a good life for his family throws him into a frightening paradox.

At times, he is a sensitive and compassionate individual. At others, he is a violently abusive parent and spouse. Bitter at what he feels is a white society that has kept him down all his life, Ray is the hamster in the wheel - too worn out to try to get off. His drunken soliloguy midway through the film is almost as powerful as the film's who has had his fill of a life with no foreseeable future. He wants out, and now. His desperate plan to escape is the crux of the film's plot, but it's not the most fascinating aspect of this work. The clincher is the consequences Dennis must face for his actions.

There's a lot more than a great calculator waiting for you when you purchase an HP 48SX or an HP 48S between June 1, 1992, and October 31, 1992. You'll get a bonus book that's good for free software, a free PC link cable and hundreds of dollars back on applications-like electrical and mechanical engineeringmemory cards, training tools, games, and HP's infrared printer.

It's a really big offer. Worth more than $500. And it's going to make your HP 48 calculator even more valuable to you. The free serial cable lets you exchange information with your PC. And the free software disk lets you enter and plot equations easily, do 3D plotting, and analyze polynomials.

Beyond all the bonuses, you'll have the right calculator for your most challenging classes. HP 48 calculators have over 2100 built-in functions and offer a unique combination of graphics and calculus.

Head over to the campus bookstore now. After all, you don't see this kind of deal every day. HP calculators. The best for your success.

Government in Bosnia claims success, but fighting, shelling continue

ASSOCIATED PRESS

SARAJEVO. Herzegovina - Outmanned and outgunned troops loyal to Bosnia's Muslim-led government claimed some successes Tuesday in their drive to break the Serb siege of Sarajevo.

But a U.N. officer said it appeared the offensive was sputtering.

Bosnia's Muslim, Serb and Croat factions have been trying to strengthen their positions before the Wednesday opening of a peace conference in London, sponsored by the European Community and the United Nations.

Lord Carrington quit Tuesday as the EC's chief negotiator in the crisis, saying he did not have the time needed to mediate a settlement in the former Yugoslav federation.

All truces reached during Carrington's peace efforts collapsed.

NATO leaders, meanwhile, delayed a decision on sending 6,000 soldiers to guard relief shipments to Bosnia-Herzegovina.

The United States and its allies are wary about becoming embroiled in the conflict, and a NATO source said the alliance wanted to see what happened at the peace talks.

TOPEKA - Lisa Dunn, standing trial a second time for kidnaping and murder, was unable to flee from her boyfriend who fancied himself as another Charles Manson, a psychologist testified Marilyn Hutchinson, a Kansas City, Mo., psychologist, said that during two February 1985 murders in Levant, Dunn was all but a slave to Daniel Remeta.

She testified in Shawnee County District Court that Dunn suffered from the battered woman syndrome and post-traumatic stress disorder as Remeta systematically abused and terrorized her. Remeta is on death row in Florida. He also has been found guilty of one murder in Arkansas and three in Kansas.

"He was actually fashioning himself after Charles Manson, Hutchinson said.

Dunn, 26, faces two counts each of murder and kidnaping.

BOSNIA— HERZEGOVINA RECOGNIZED COUNTRIES Ethnic regions Montenegro

The upsurge in fighting Tuesday reduced already-modest hopes for the peace conference.

Similar efforts earlier failed to end the carnage, which began when Bosnia-Herzegovina's majority Muslims and Croats voted for independence Feb. 29.

Ethnic Serb militias want to remain united with the smaller Yugoslavia, which is dominated by Serbia and seized control of much of Bosnia's territory.

At least 8,000 people have died in the fighting - U.S. Senate investigators say up to 35,000 civilians have been killed - and more than 1 million are homeless.

Fighting erupted with new intensity in the Bosnian capital after a relatively quiet night. Mortar rounds and rockets smashed into the presidential building and adjacent military headquarters. Several large buildings were ablaze by dusk.

Warplanes flown by Serbs reportedly attacked the cities of Jajce, Tuzla and Hajici in Bosnia.

The commander of Bosnian government forces, Sefer Haliovic, also accused Serbs of using "nerve gas" against his troops.

These Bosnian claims could not

Coffey County officials indicted

7 charged with offenses; arraignment set

ASSOCIATED PRESS

BURLINGTON - Attorneys for six current and former Coffey County officials indicted by a county grand jury were given another week Tuesday to study the charges.

Coffey County District Court were continued to Sept. 1, the same day on which a seventh official is to be arraigned. Indictments issued by a county grand jury Aug. 19 charge the seven with offenses ranging from theft to violating the Kansas bid laws, according to Steve Doering, a special prosecutor from Garnett.

Named in the indictments are County Engineer Harry L. Hunsley of Burlington; present county commissioners Melvin Bunge of Waverly, Vernon Sergeant of Lebo, Johnnie Sleezer of Gridley and Melvin Cummings of Burlington; former county commissioner David Beard of Burlington; and County Road Superintendent George Finical of Burlington. Arraignments for all but Finical had originally been set for Tuesday.

Phillip Fromme called the grand jury in June after a group called the Coffey County Concerned Citizens presented petitions requesting the investigation.

Doering was named special prosecutor for the hearings because of a conflict of interest involving Coffey County Attorney Brad Jones, who is the official representative of the County Commission.

The indictments are contained four criminal complaints.

One complaint contains four separate counts alleging that the five past and current county commissioners and Hunsley, in various combinations, violated state laws requiring competitive bids on road and bridge projects costing more than $5,000.

The complaint alleges that contracts for guardrail installation, general road improvements and painting stripes on roads were awarded even though bids weren't sought.

Finical and Hunsley are each charged with one count unlawful deprivation of property for allegedly renting county equipment, in violation of state

Hunsley and Finical are also charged with one count each of theft and permitting a false claim and official misconduct.

Doering said the defendants, if convicted, face possible fines District Magistrate Judge or sentences in the county jail.

Firefighters tackle 64,000-acre blaze in West for 6th day

ASSOCIATED PRESS

ROUND MOUNTAIN, Calif. -Exhausted firefighters spent a sixth day Tuesday tackling a 64,000-acre fire that already has ravaged an area twice the size of San Francisco and caused an estimated $5.5 million in

The fire, which has destroyed 307 homes in several hamlets along Highway 299, was kept in check overnight and was declared 60 percent contained. But fire bosses warned that flames could overrun containment lines again if forecasts of milder winds proved false.

"Cautiously optimistic is the term we are using," said U.S. Forest Service official Pam Bowman.

In Idaho, a 257,000-acre fire the largest of several burning throughout the West - threatened a tree believed to be the state's oldest ponderosa pine. The branches of the 186-foot tree caught fire Monday evening but it wasn't clear whether the trunk was burned.

That blaze was about 70 percent contained by early Tuesday, but authorities had 34 more miles of fire lines to cut.

The so-called Fountain fire in Northern California was the worst of several fires in the region. It has blackened enough commercial timber to build 50,000 houses so far has cost $5.5 million.

At its peak last week, the fire forced the evacuation of 7,500 people and drizzled ash as far away as San Francisco, about 200 miles

Citizens continue demand for ousting

ASSOCIATED PRESS

BRASILIA, Brazil - From city streets to the halls of Congress. pressure mounted Tuesday for the impeachment of President Fernando Collor de Mello, embroiled in a corruption scandal.

Congress released a scathing report Monday that accused Collor of taking $6.5 million in undue benefits from his 1989 campaign treasurer Paulo Cesar Farias.

Investigators said Collor knew Farias was running an extortion ring that took millions of dollars from businessmen in return for government contracts or favors.

In Sao Paulo, more than 30,000 students chanting "Collor in Jail" and "Impeachment Now" marched through the banking district. Many wore striped prison-type shirts and waved Brazilian flags.

Street vendor Carlos Ferrer sold T-shirts bearing the words: "I believe in the president, and in elves, Santa Claus and virginity." He said business was brisk.

The report will be grounds for a petition to Congress by the Brazilian Bar Association for the impeachment of Collor, Brazil's first freely-elected president after 21 years of military rule.
"The president has lost the moral conditions to govern the country," said Gov. Luiz Antonio richest and most populous state.

The 22-member panel of investigators is to vote Wednesday whether to approve the report. But the government already concedes it "Challenging the report would just radicalize the debate. It would be counter-productive," said Rep. Roberto Jefferson, one of Collor's most stalwart defenders on the coffers to friendly legislators. He recently gave a pay raise to the military and released $400 million for low-cost housing and sanitation

But the government forces were seriously weakened when the leaders of two pro-government parties announced they would support impeachment.

The center-left Democratic Labor Party broke with Collor at an anti-corruption rally Monday night that drew more than 100,000 people in Rio de Janeiro.

More damaging was the withdrawal of support by the conservative Social Democratic Party, one of Collor's earliest

The true star of this film, however, is its writer and director, Matty Rich. Only 19 years old when the movie was released in 1991, Rich has the raw potential to show the film world that Spike Lee is not king of black cinema.

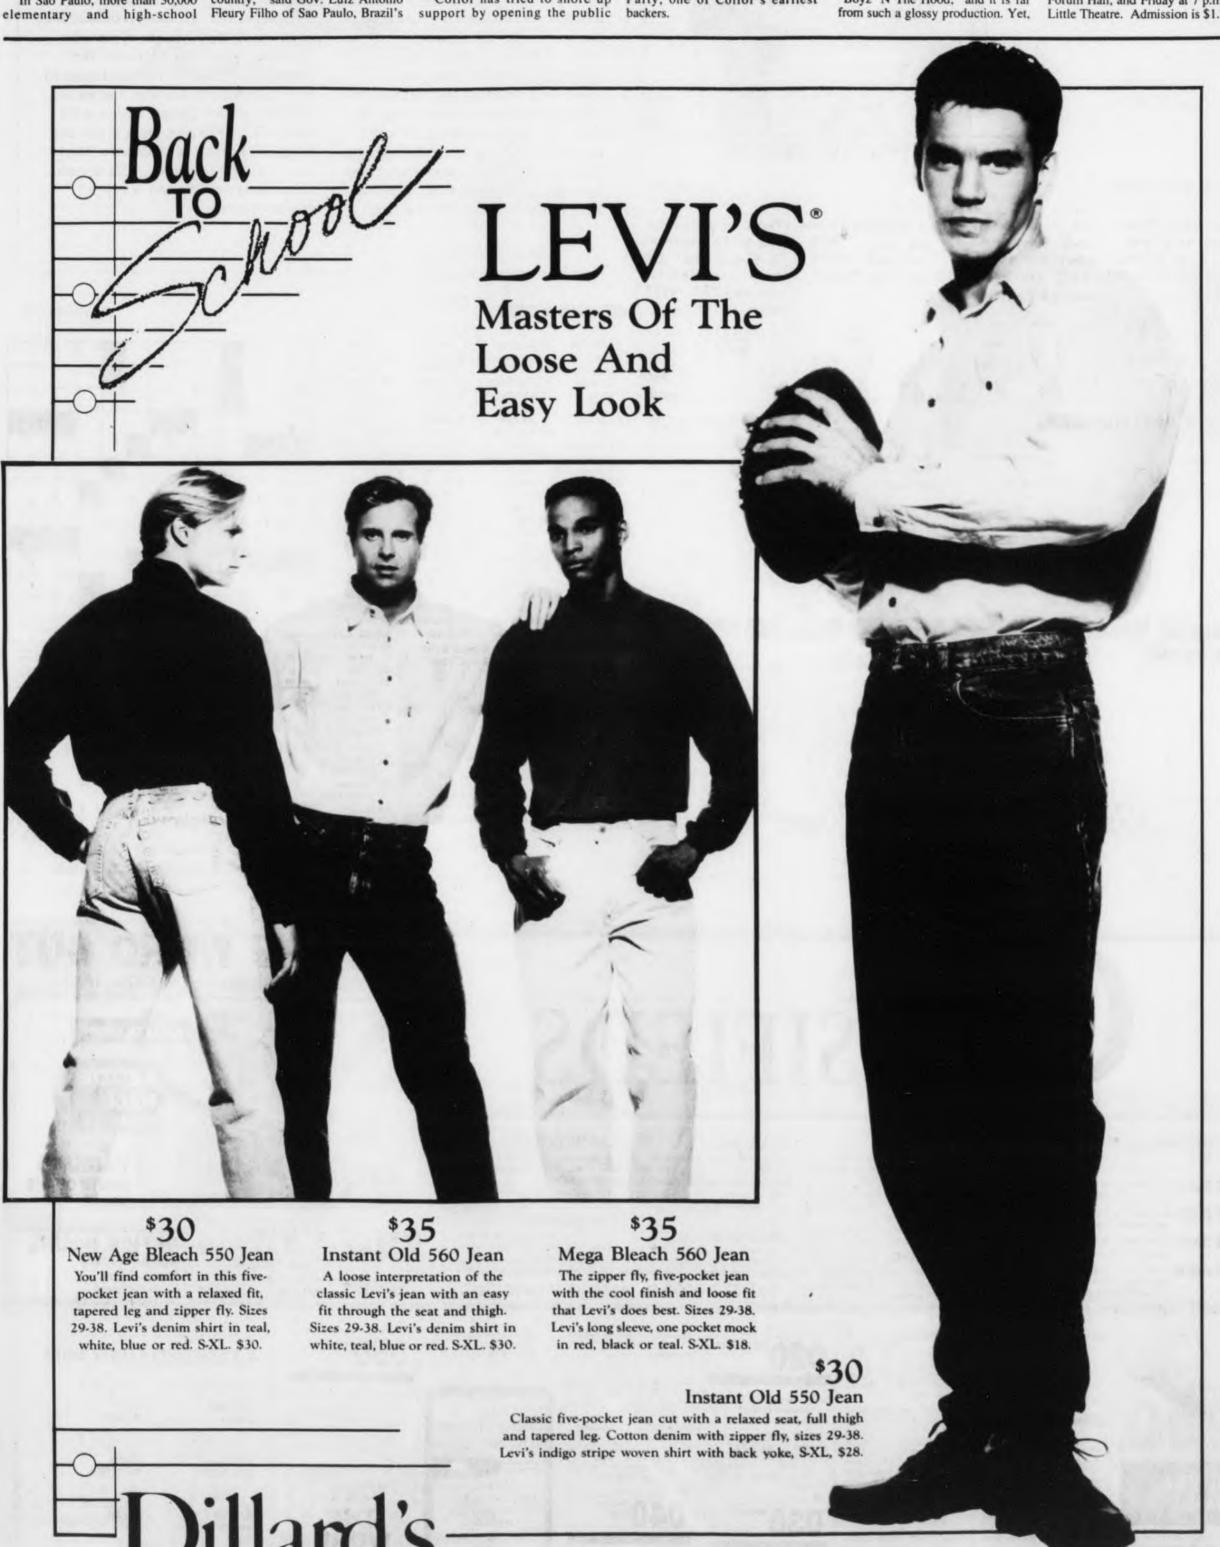

Beyond his other duties, Rich also played the role of Dennis' friend Larry "Love" as well as penning a song for the film's soundtrack.

"Straight Out Of Brooklyn" does not have the financial budget of a "Boyz 'N The Hood," and it is far by stripping away the glam, Matty Rich and his cast have made a film that seems much more real and tangible than "Boyz."

I'd like to show this movie to all those wealthy GOP geezers out there who insist that anyone can rise in this American society if they just pull themselves up by their bootstraps. This film shows it's easier said than done.

The UPC Kaleidoscope film "Straight Out Of Brooklyn" will be showing tonight and Thursday at 7 and 9:30 p.m. in K-State Union Forum Hall, and Friday at 7 p.m. in Little Theatre. Admission is $1.75.

ONE DAY TO LIVE

Day 1 — the introduction.

We have a couple who are madly in love with each other, but they aren't open with it because their fathers don't get along. The woman, Delilah, is from a wealthy family in Moscow. She has all the amenities in life with which most Muscovites are unfamiliar: eating at the Moscow McDonald's, owning a brandnew Yugo and never having her mail opened by the KGB. Meanwhile, Sputnik, her lover, grew up on a mayonnaise farm just outside of Kiev with his half-sister, Ogre Kornbutt, who knows only one language — Swahili — and her half-sister (Sputnik's quarter-sister), Susan, who works at the Moscow McDonald's as the Boris McLenin clown. The main reason their fathers don't get along is because the rivalry stems from a couple of centuries ago when Tybalt killed Mercutio. The hatred between the two families lingers on in this day and age. Anyway, Sputnik and Delilah met when Sputnik loaded up his truck with his two pigs, Snow White and Napolean, and moved to Moscow. Movie stars ... a funky language ... BIG women ... a swimming pool. Sputnik is now a Moscow Hillbilly.

Paperwork delays new roof for Denison

DIANE DENISON

Paperwork is the only thing delaying completion of the last of the roofs on campus that were scheduled to be replaced or repaired during the last fiscal year.

Renovations for seven roofs were budgeted $275,000 during the 1992 fiscal year. Only one remains to be done.

Denison Hall is the only project not yet started. The roof's replacement has been delayed because of contractor paperwork.

"The first contractor went bankrupt, so we had to go with another bid, and the second contractor will be delayed until mid-September," said Ed Rice, assistant vice president of Physical Buildings with new roofs are the James R. Macdonald Laboratory at Cardwell Hall, Shellenberger Hall and parts of Seaton Court. The Chester E. Peters Recreation Complex is under contract for a new roof, and the roofs of Bushnell and Dykstra halls have been repaired.

The average roof lasts 20 years, and K-State has approximately 80 roofs, which would require the repair of four roofs per year, Rice said.

Four buildings are scheduled to get new roofs this year. A budget of $310,000 has been allocated for Kedzie Hall, the west wing of Waters Hall, the Art Building and more of Seaton Roofs on the KSU Foundation building, Dickens Hall and half of Aheam Field House will be replaced during the 1994 fiscal year. There is a budget of $487,000 for these buildings and $240,000 of it is for Ahearn.

In November, Dickens received major water damage. It is not scheduled for a new roof until is not the roof, but the interior roof's drains.

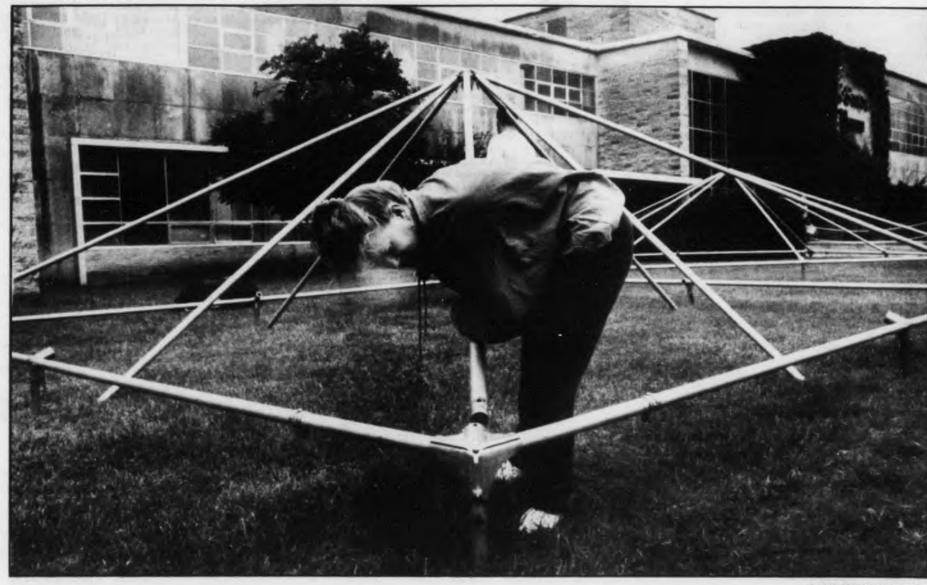

"Everything is fine as long as they keep the drains free," said Duane Nellis, head of the department of geography.

Interior damage to Nellis' office has been repaired, but other rooms remain in need of painting and repair on the second floor of Dickens.

A record 39 days of rain during June and July, 7.68 inches above the norm, had little effect on the roofs this summer, Rice said.

The rain was slow and steady enough to only cause the insulation in Denison to become wet and need replacing.

Campus Fest hits the K-State campus today, luring students into various booths for free food, product samples, giveaways and

The festival, sponsored by the K-State Union Bookstore, is a twoday event featuring 22 different local, regional and national companies ranging from computer software to candy bars to cologne.

Campus Fest runs from 10 a.m. to 4 p.m. in Union Plaza. Kay Farley, Union Bookstore manager, said Campus Fest visited the grounds only two years ago and found the experience exciting. She also said student feedback was The Bookstore pays to bring the pay to participate, she said.

Appreciation is only one reason why Campus Fest comes to K-State, Farley said.

"It's brought to campus to provide excitement for the beginning of school," she said. "The excitement it creates is wonderful. It's kind of our way of saying we're glad you're back and have a good time this year."

MarketSource Corp. Cranbury, N.J., organizes the event, which tours 50 university festival to K-State, and vendors campuses in the fall and 10 in the spring, said event coordinator

> Lane said one of her favorite aspects of Campus Fest is working with students and seeing that everyone walks away happy.

Karen Meyer, director of event marketing, said students' reactions to products are enjoyable.

"I enjoy coming out to see the students' reaction," she said. "Students seem surprised or find it unexpected to get free samples."

Fest will be from 10 a.m. to 4 p.m. in Union Plaza, between Seaton Hall and the Union.

Finney praises, challenges women

"America's heritage is richer for the participation of Kansas women."

GOV. JOAN FINNEY

Gov. Joan Finney praised women's achievements and challenged them to continue their work in a speech Wednesday at Fort Riley.

She addressed about 90 men and women as the keynote speaker for the 1992 Women's Equality Day celebration.

The 1st Infantry Division and Fort Riley sponsored the event Wednesday afternoon at the Leader's Club at Fort Riley. The event commemorated the 19th Amendment, which gave women the right to vote.

Morris Boyd, assistant division commander at Fort Riley, made opening remarks about Women's Equality Day by quoting baseball legend Yogi Berra. Berra mistakenly said, upon receiving an award, that he would like to thank all those "who have made this day necessary," instead of possible.

"Maybe Yogi wasn't too far off the mark," Boyd said. "Today we gather to reflect on some key events that make a day like today possible. But, at the same time, I think we have to reflect on the fact that in order to go forward, days like today are definitely

No-fly zone declared

ASSOCIATED PRESS

BAGHDAD, Iraq - Baghdad newspapers today denounced the United States and its allies for their plan to protect Shiite Muslims by blocking Iraqi planes from the southern skies.

President Bush officially announced the ultimatum in Washington and said it would begin in 24 hours. At the United Nations in New York, Iraqi Ambassador Abdul Al-Amir Al-anbari was summoned to the French U.N. mission to receive a communication about the "no-fly zone" from the U.S., British, French and Russian envoys.

"Our great people are on a state of alert, unified and angry along with their leadership and armed forces and are ready to fight the enemies and to foil their Zionistimperialist schemes," said Al-Thawra, the organ of the ruling Baath party.

The allied move comes amid steady Western condemnation of President Saddam Hussein over his treatment of the Shiites in the southern marshlands and his reluctance to admit U.N. weapons inspectors to Iraqi ministries as required under Gulf War cease-fire

The warning tells Iraq to clear the skies south of the 32nd parallel or risk attacks in the air. In Washington, the State Department said Iraq had essentially moved all its

Rep. Kent Glasscock, R-Manhattan, was recently chosen as one of 35 nationally recognized representatives to attend the Toll Fellowship Program for young state Glasscock was asked by the Council of State Governments to attend the week-long program from Aug. 29 through Sept. 3 in Lexington, Ky. It is designed to prepare today's new leaders for continued government service and/or for higher office, CSG executive director Dag Ryen said.

Ryen said the Toll Program is a training and developmental program for young and dynamic

"The participants discuss how the role of state government has evolved and its implications to the fabric of American society," he said.

Each year, eight state leaders from West, South, East and Midwest regions are nominated by committees.

The leaders can represent any of the three branches of state government.

CSG then nominates a secretary of state, lieutenant governor and state treasurer.

The program is designed to provide interaction between state leaders and to evaluate each to determine his or her personal strengths, Ryen said.

Glasscock, who was nominated by the Midwest Committee, said he is excited by the prospect of meeting with some of today's most

Senior studies farm methods in homeland

Dan Dostie, senior in agricultural technology management, went back to his roots last year when he studied in Toulouse, France.

The city is only 60 miles from the village his forefathers emigrated from two centuries ago. Dostie's ancestor, a captain in the military, left France in 1754 to fight for new land in North

Ten generations later in 1991, Dostie returned to learn from the French how to better farm in America.

Dostie is the first in his family to return to France since 1754, as well as the first K-Stater to go overseas through the agricultural economics program.

Although Dostie said he found many differences in farming techniques and crop patterns, there were some French customs he recognized from his father's stories. One of those customs was the afternoon siesta, when most of southwestern France takes a short nap, he said.

L'Ecole Superieure d'Agriculture, the French school where Dostie studied, found three families for him to live with during a five-month internship in the village of Labarthéte.

He worked at two grape vineyards and a dairy farm. After milking cows, making hybrid strains of seed corn, and perfecting his French for five months, Dostie moved to Toulouse.

For the last half of the year, he attended school and lived with other foreign exchange students from Hungary, Italy, Spain, Canada and Czechoslovakia.

Dostie was one of 450 students at the small private agricultural school.

"I felt like I was in high school

All students attended class from 8 a.m. to 5 p.m. in the same lecture hall five days a week. Since coursework was structured rigidly, taking optional classes happened less frequently than at K-State. There was only one exam each

The internship program was very demanding, Dostie said, as all French students were expected to get an internship every summer and a sixmonth internship the last year of the Students then write an in-depth paper similar to a master's thesis at the conclusion of the five-year program.

He said K-State's professors seemed generally more qualified to teach than those in France. French teachers are often professionals who are invited to teach because of their knowledge, he said, but who have no training to be

Many trained government officials spoke on the new economic order emerging in Europe as a result of the breakdown of trade barriers.

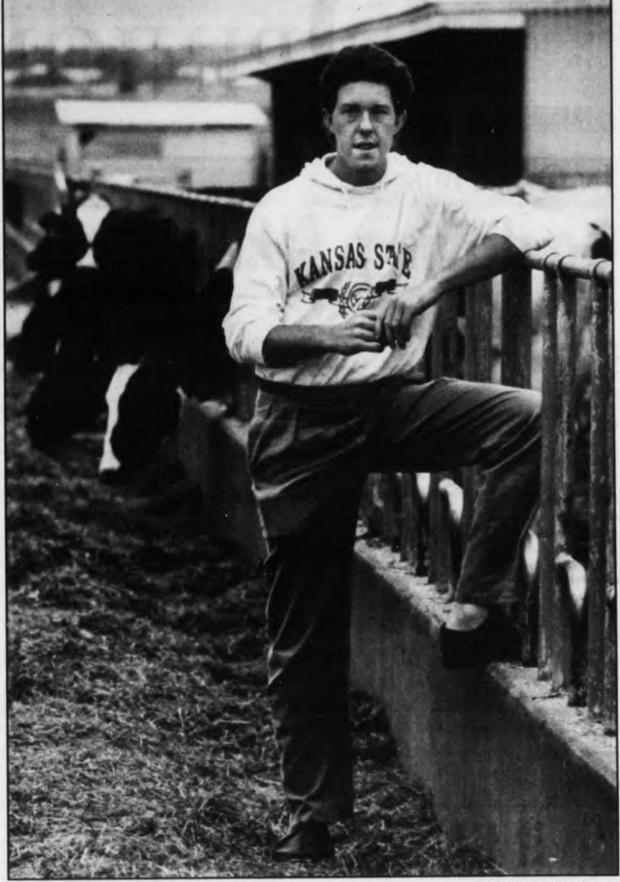

One advantage of France's intensive program is that each class got to go to the foreign country they studied, Dostie

Dostie's class studied Irish agricultural policies, and then visited agricultural firms in Ireland for a week

Arlo Biere, professor of agricultural economics, said an agreement between K-State's agricultural economics program and, l'Ecole Superieure d'Agriculture allowed Dostie to pay K-State tuition for a visiting French student while the French student paid Dostie's tuition in Toulouse.

K-State has was host to 11 French students through the agricultural economics program, and Biere said it has added an international dimension to

Go driving; take your chances

THE ISSUE

traffic has exard to drivers and destrians

WE SUGGEST

lanning before sauing building permits and installation of crosswalks on Manhettan

Once again, the season to run the gauntlet across Manhattan Avenue from campus is upon

So is the suicide run of trying to go to Wal-Mart and get through the Bluemont, Third Street, and Tuttle Creek Boulevard traffic. And now, a new wrinkle has been added to this danger zone: Sonic Drive-In.

For sure, a large number of persons and Frankie Avalon groupies are overjoyed to see the arrival of the Sonic on Third Street. But the location couldn't be in a worse place. Before, it was just a matter of waiting to clear the intersections. Now, it will be drivers taking their lives into their own hands when they venture to this portion of Manhattan.

Needless to say, the return of thousands of college students at once creates more than a few traffic snarls. This problem has been further complicated by the overabundance of unmarked intersections throughout the city, pedestrians who enjoy reading while crossing the street, and a severe lack of parking spaces in and around Aggieville.

Sonic being put where it is only adds to an already impossible quagmire that at times makes Manhattan, Kan., look like Manhattan, New York.

So where does the city go from here?

The time has since passed to place, at least, pedestrian crosswalks on Manhattan Avenue. so that students who live east of campus don't have to calculate windows of opportunity to make it across alive. Asking for a stoplight would probably be out of the question, since there's already plenty on the west side of campus.

And whatever happened to logical city planning that kept new construction away from already traffic-congested areas? Manhattan would be well-advised to take a second look at an intersection before it goes and gives out building

So pedestrian and driver beware: If you drive, map out your route or you might not make it home till Christmas. And if you walk and read at the same time, LOOK UP!

▶ CRIME

Strong action needed from Congress now

Editor,

For almost a year now, comprehensive anti-crime legislation has been stalled in Congress, while the spread of violent crime is foremost in the minds of many Americans as one of the greatest threats to our communites.

Partisan bickering and inaction on crime legislation has added not only to the dissatisfaction with government in general, but underscores a sense of helplessness people feel. Images of violent crimes reinforce the view that its level is rising unchecked.

Certainly, there is little evidence to suggest that progress is being made in the war against crime, and Congress must bear the responsibility for failing to take action. But the truth of the matter is that even if the current crime bill becomes law, it will only be a small step foward.

For example, the crime bill calls for the death penalty for more than 50 crimes, for everything from genocide to using weapons of mass destruction. In actuality, it will only apply to a small number of cases, as most murder cases are tried in state courts.

The crime bill also provides for a waiting period prior to the purchase of a handgun, which I have long supported. However, this would not be a cure-all for stopping crimes involving handguns. Finally, are we willing to pay the $3-billion price for law enforcement, prison construction, and boot camps for youthful offenders?

What can we do? People must feel safe in their communities and secure in their homes. To effectively fight crime, criminals must know they will be caught and punished if they break the law.

Additional funding will not be enough. We must also make better use of existing funds. Among other things, we must acknowledge that last year, it cost $25 billion in federal, state and local funds to operate existing prisons and jails.

It is time to make some hard choices - to set priorities, reallocate resources, engage in long-range planning. I believe that we must attack crime and lawlessness - our communities, our families, and our children demand it.

Civil liberties groups are the real censors

JOHN

Count" album earlier this month, predictable knee-jerk fashion and howled censorship.

The enemy was the same. Once again those radical, fascist conservatives were on the hunt, ready to devour anyone who dared speak out against the establishment.

Yet, it's ironic that the same people who cried censorship over the Ice-T issue and self-righteously exalted themselves as America's civil liberties protectors have in recent years been among the most active censors in the country.

The most censored group in America today is not the music industry, the National Endowment for the Arts or even the KKK, but those who espouse Judeo-Christian values. There is an obvious bias toward these values in America today. Across the nation, civil liberties groups are attempting to purge Christianity from the public sector. For example, in dozens of cities the ACLU has prohibited the display of Christmas nativity scenes, which are usually bought with private funds. Neutrality toward religion in the public sector, especially education, is a joke. Our schools reek of an anti-Christian bias. During my senior year in high school I was prohibited from using the word "God" in a column. Christmas break is called "winter break." Thanksgiving is no longer a holiday remembered for the pilgrims thanking God for their blessings, but is instead known as the day the pilgrims thanked the Native Americans for helping them grow vegetables.

Of course, all this censorship is justified by the separation of church and state. What I find interesting, though, is that a separation of church and state clause can't be found in the Constitution. The First Amendment reads, "Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or abridging the freedom of speech .... ."

The separation of church and state idea comes from the first clause. The intent of the clause was to prevent Congress from establishing an official state religion supported by taxes. Today, the First Amendment has been stretched to include a "separation" hen rap singer Ice-T was of religion and government or a forced to pull the song freedom from religion. This "Cop Killer" off his "Body illogical line of thinking has lead to the direct violation of the next two civil liberties groups responded in clauses, free exercise of religion and freedom of speech, especially when used by religious people.

Besides flagrantly violating the intent of the First Amendment by creating a self-serving separation of church and state clause, civil liberties groups have even violated their own erroneous interpretation of the Constitution. Humanism, the belief that man and his universe are self-sufficient and self-sustaining, is being taught in our schools. In the humanism manifestos, humanists have claimed that their belief is a religion, a claim the Supreme Court has upheld. So how can humanism be taught in our schools that are both neutral to religion and separated from religion?

Double standards hypocrisies are at the heart of modern anti-censorship thinking. The National Endowment for the Arts vs. Sen. Jesse Helms issue is the quintessential example of anticensorship doublethink.

Helms proposed a congressional ban on the use of public money to circulate obscene materials or materials that would blaspheme religion. One publicly funded photographer, Andres Serrano, is best known for his work depicting a crucifix submerged in a flask of urine. The proposal did not state that artists like Serrano could not produce such material. That would be censorship. Helms merely proposed that he shouldn't have to pay for material that desecrates his religious beliefs. How would the public respond if it were asked to pay for art depicting John F. Kennedy submerged in a flask of

I strongly oppose censorship. I support the rights of others to express ideas I disagree with and find offensive. I even applaud the civil liberties groups for fighting individuals and organizations who are attempting to take away people's freedom of speech. God created man with a mind so he could reason and express his Nevertheless, no thoughts. freedom, including the freedom of speech, is absolute. Should freedom of privacy be upheld in cases of child abuse? No. The truth is that the freedom of expression is forcefully defended by civil liberties groups as long as you express an opinion with which they

Pure Food not the answer

he Pure Food Campaign says it is trying to protect you. Don't believe it.

The campaign is led by one thousand of America's top chefs and is organized to fight against that great blight on haughty cuisine - genetically engineered food. The menus at the chefs' trendy restaurants are stamped with a double helix with a slash through it, advertising their boycott against bioengineered food, which they consider impure.

Most people couldn't care less about this culinary discrimination. Normally, such a tiny story wouldn't merit any serious profit gimmick that could wreck the planet and give us all a nasty day. These chefs think bioengineering is weird. The very word generates images of two-headed babies. Even if biotechnology works on an organism, a tomato that tastes like a carrot would attention, even from me. But the Pure

Food Campaign's rejection of biotechnology is an example of a stupid

wreak havoc with their recipes. Bioengineering is different, though not in the way they think. Researchers working with genetic manipulation of food plants are not going to create psuedo-broccoli to take over the Rose Garden, and brussels sprouts spores will not become the next Andromeda Strain. These scientists who work with food plants, including a few on our campus, mainly want to find ways to feed more people. By splicing protein genes into different breeds of plants, they can create wheat that is more resistant to drought or rice with greater nutritional value. With careful planning, geneticists can even create plants that are healthy for us but that kill bugs dead when they try to eai

HAWKS

For starving people in drought-stricken countries, these traits are important. As the world's population continues to rise, they will become even more important as we try to feed more people. It is certainly true that we need to control our population, but it would be nice if we could curb starvation as

Thus, the Pure Food Campaign, with its rejection of bioengineered food, is thumbing its nose not only at American biotechnical research, but also at hungry people around the world. Drawing on their chic, environmentally-correct clientele with their slashed double-helix stamps, these chefs are doing anything but protecting the public from food impurities. Instead, by raising questions among the public about biotechnology, they are limiting their green consciousness to the dollars on the bottom line.

The Pure Food Campaign's position is more than greedy and nonconstructive. With its rejection of a technology that could save or improve the lives of millions of needy people, it almost seems like racism. The campaign encourages "cultured" Americans to dissociate themselves from the troubles faced by other peoples around the world. By doing so, it perpetuates the presence of an elite group of people namely, us - who waste more energy and resources than anyone else on the planet.

Hopefully, though, poetic justice will prevail. Skillfully applied genetic engineering is already reducing the need for chemical pesticides and herbicides and may one day limit the use of artificial preservatives. Those chefs in the campaign who do not use exclusively organically grown food products are therefore increasing their dependence on these chemicals. So, their attempt to protect their patrons from impurities actually may have the reverse effect.

If not, we can always hope that they choke.

Food research lab helps Kansas industries

You might smell soup cooking in Seaton Hall these days.

Asparagus soup is being made in K-State's new food engineering lab as part of a research project.

The thermal processing lab is a small-scale food-processing plant, said Brad Strahm, graduate student in agricultural engineering with an emphasis in food processing.

The Kansas Value Added Center provided funding for the lab, which is run primarily by the departments of agricultural engineering, foods and nutrition and horticulture.

The lab provides support for Kansas companies involved in the food industry.

development and expansion," said Richard Hahn, director of the Value Added Center.

The center was also responsible for getting the lab started. We worked with the deans and the researchers and got it going,"

Hahn said. "There have been other dofrom the deans of engineering and agriculture, but we are the main monetary support," Hahn said.

The lab makes possible drying food by hot air, freezing, or spraying, Strahm said. It can also be used to preserve food in cans. bottles, jars and pouches.

The lab will be used for research

The asparagus project is one of the lab's first research projects and benefits a Kansas grower, he said.

The grower throws away a lot of low grade asparagus that can't be sold as fresh, Strahm said.

He said he hopes to dry this asparagus to use it as a powder or for dry asparagus soup mixes.

information the food processing industry can take and use on their own," Strahm said. The lab is located in Seaton 138A in the agricultural engineering Construction began the first part of January. The lab is now complete and operational, Strahm said.

Cereal conference attracts buyers from Midwest

Buyers came from all around to discuss cereal at the Manhattan

Ramada Inn August 7-8. It wasn't breakfast cereal, however.

The 1992 KSU Fall Cereal Conference - which focuses on wheat and barley - has been a tradition since the turn of the 20th century, said Kraig Roozeboom, coordinator of the Kansas Crop Performance Tests, and faculty member in the Department of Agronomy.

"It started way back when people would take a train to Manhattan to see the variety of wheat there was to release," Roozeboom said. "Breeders would come from all over to buy."

This year, buyers came from mostly Midwestern states, including Texas and the four states that border Kansas. They also came from organizations like Pioneer Seeds and Agri-Pro.

Though it is called a cereal conference, Roozeboom said that it is actually a winter grain conference.

Winter grains primarily consist areas include the south-central

"There are oodles of wheat varieties out there, and we tried to evaluate the yields and performances," Roozeboom said. "Part of the mandate of K-State is to develop varieties. However, it has been several years since a new variety has been released."

Possibly the most promising addition to the wheat harvesting industry is Karl, a new genetic variety of winter wheat developed at K-State in 1990.

Roozeboom said Karl, which was one of the varieties of wheat discussed at the conference, resists diseases such as leaf rust.

Karl has increased more rapidly in popularity among Kansas wheat farmers than any other wheat

When it first came out in 1990, less than 1 percent of all wheat raised in Kansas was of the Karl variety. A survey done earlier this year indicated that more than 11 percent of the 1992 Kansas wheat crop was Karl. The predominant

Head-to-head with the big boys

SHANE KEYSER Collegian

Quentin Neujahr practices snapping the ball to a quarterback during a pre-practice drill Wednesday afternoon on the practice field. Neujert is preparing for his third year with the Wildcats.

Neujahr is getting his shot

"I wanted to prove to everyone that I could play."

QUENTIN NEUJAHR

BRIAN ANDERSON

As a young boy in Ulysses, Nebraska, Quentin Neujahr wanted to be a Cornhusker on the mighty Nebraska football team.

Those boyhood dreams didn't come true, however. The Huskers didn't offer Neujahi a scholarship, even though he made the all-state team twice as a center at Centennial High. He

But before he could sign the papers, K-State offered him a scholarship, and he has reaped the benefits since he started all 22 games since in 1990.

"I wanted to prove to everyone I could play."

Neujahr said. "And I never thought I would be here talking to the media.

"I have two strengths numbers 65 and 75 (offensive guards Eric Wolford and Toby Lawrence, respectively). I wouldn't trade them for anyone in the Big Eight."

The 6-foot-4, 270-pound junior has received first-team preseason all-Big Eight honors in several magazines. He headlines an offensive line that returns four starters and one part-time starter from a team that ate up a K-State record of 4,231 yards of total offense last year. The Wildcats averaged 384.64 yards a game, second in the conference.

As quarterbacks Jason Smargiasso and Matt Garber battle for starting time, Neujahr said it doesn't matter who he is giving the ball to.

"They're two great guys," Neujahr said. "They say 'Hut,' and I give them the ball."

Neujahr makes the line calls to the team and also makes defensive reads, organizes the offensive line, controls the nose guard and reaches the line

Neujahr said he has personal goals this year of getting

Simoneau will lift the Wildcats

BRIAN ANDERSON

Collegian

K-State center Quentin Neujahr can describe nose tackle Jeff Simoneau in three words.

"Simoneau is big," he says.
Simoneau, a 6-foot 280-pounder, is big.
And powerful. In the weight room last week, the transferred senior set a K-State record with a squat of 791 pounds, roughly the equivalent of a good two-year-old steer. He has also bench pressed 503 pounds, incline-bench pressed 476 pounds and power cleaned 403.

He's fast, too. In the spring drills, he ran the 40 in 4.55 seconds, and he blazed the agility run in 4.02 seconds, missing the K-State mark at 3.77.

His physical abilities, along with his three seasons at Arizona State, give him a chance to start on the defense, some say, if not a good amount of playing time on the field.

Simoneau's only setbacks, it seems, are that he's still learning the defensive plays, and he didn't play nose tackle for the Sun Devils. He played fullback.

"I enjoy the contact, but nose tackles don't get that much glory as running backs," said Simoneau, who will probably share time with sophomore Darrell Harbert at nose tackle. No one at this time is ruling out that he could see some time at fullback for the Cats, however.

"The offensive side is more complex, and this is something different," he said.

At ASU, Simoneau gained more than 500 yards and scored five touchdowns in 14 career games for the Sun Devils. He was redshirted in his first season in 1988 and became a starter for ASU the next two years. His top performance came in 1989 against Washington as he rushed for 70 yards on 21 carries.

Simoneau cited the coaches and "getting tired" of ASU as the main reasons he left to play for the University of Utah.

"I was engaged to a girl' from Utah, and she wanted to return," Simoneau said. "We were going to live in Utah, and I would play for the Utes. But we broke up, and I decided to return (to Kansas)."

When he did arrive at K-State last season, however, he had to sit out due to NCAA transfer rules. During that time, he gained a few pounds, despite lifting weights and participating in practice.

"At Arizona State, I weighed 240 to 250 pounds," Simoneau said. "A year ago, the conditioning coach wanted to move me to nose guard. The running back coach said it was all right. Who would have thought that that I would be playing nose guard at K-State?"

Simoneau played at Smith Center High School in Smith Center, Kan., where he rushed for 3,800 yards in his final two seasons and earned Parade High School All-American honors.

OLUMN

Summer sports good, bad and ugly

The summer sports scene had its moments. It had its dead spots, too. With two weeks of Olympic coverage thrown in the mix, the sports gurus of America got a taste of nearly every sport known to mankind.

Without question, this summer the greatest team ever was assembled. You know them, 11 pros and one college kid who didn't belong. The Dream Team was perfection personified.

Did anyone honestly believe the Dream Team could be touched? They played at half speed most of the time and still cruised.

More perfection — the Chicago Bulls. Granted, the Bulls struggled, but they still won the NBA title. When a team survives the nightmares that Michael Jordan and company did and finds a way to win, it's a sign of greatness.

Give Chicago the one player they need (whomever he may be) in the off-season, and it's three-peat in 1993.

Nothing tickled my fancy more this summer than the world's greatest track star, Carl Lewis. His long jump performance in the '92 Games was impressive, but it didn't compare to his anchor leg of the 4x100 meter relay. He smoked.

Lewis reportedly ran an 8.8 second split. Because of a running start, though, that time isn't record-book material. Nonetheless, it was the highlight of my summer.

Now let's move on to the average. Watching your favorite baseball team should elicit some emotion. The only emotions the Kansas City Royals brought me were laughter and tears. Unfortunately, both at the same time.

Kansas City is undoubtedly the most inconsistent team in the American League. The Royals, however, consistently lose the close games. Injuries, errors, suspect pitching and lack of a good clean-up hitter have turned the team into a ho-hummer. I can tell you Royals fans miss 1985. I do.

The Reebok controversy was a bunch of hot air. Purely political and ridiculous. C'mon, guys, it was just a sweatsuit. It's not as if Jordan, John Stockton and Barkley were going to abandon Nike to become Reebok spokesmen. Give me a

And last but not least, I must fit in Andre Agassi. The flashy, long-haired whipper-snapper from Vegas won the bank at Wimbledon. But was his jubilation sincere? After Agassi's victory, he fell to the ground like the great Bjorn Borg. Some say it was staged, sort of like a professional wrestling match. A remote camera showed Agassi's coach gesturing Agassi to hit the deck and stay down. The fan at home never saw that shot. A cheap shot. But it makes you wonder if Agassi hammed it up.

It was a summer of notable happenings in the world of sports — not all good, not all bad. But that's sports for you. It can make you ecstatic or sick to your stomach.

SPORTS DIGEST

FOURTH IN A ROW

ARLINGTON, Texas (AP) — Rookie Roger Pavlik stopped Kansas City for seven 1-3 innings before getting relief help from Jeff Russell, and the Texas Rangers beat the Royals 3-1 Wednesday night.

The Rangers won their third straight game. The Royals have lost four in a row.

Pavlik (2-1) won his second straight start. He gave up one run on six hits, struck out four and walked two.

Russell relieved with one out in the eighth inning and runners on first and third. He struck out Mike Macfarlane, retired Wally Joyner on a popup and worked the ninth for his 28th save.

JuanSamuel hit a lead-off triple in the fifth and stole home as Jeff Conine squared to bunt. Conine missed the bunt try, but Samuel scored when the ball got away from catcher Ivan Rodriguez.

TEXAS A&M SPOILS WALSH'S RETURN

ANAHEIM, Calif. (AP) — Bill Walsh went back to school Wednesday night and flunked his first test.

Walsh, coaching his first college game in 14 years, saw his No. 17
Stanford squad blow a lead in the fourth quarter and lose to No. 7 threw a 21-yard touchdown pass to Greg Schorp with 12:10 to play. Then Terry Venetoulias kicked a 39-yard field goal with 4:27 remaining to lift Texas A&M in the season opener.

THE SEASON'S OVER FOR MARK GUBICZA

KANSAS CITY (AP) — Kansas City right-hander Mark Gubicza is likely finished for the season because of a sore shoulder.

Dr. Léwis Yocum examined Gubicza Monday in Los Angeles and said the soreness was probably caused by weakness in the rotator cuff. He had surgery on his rotator cuff in 1990.

INTRAMURALS

Intramural deadlines nearing

Collegian

The deadline for nine of this fall's intramural competitions is Friday.

Entries can be turned in by groups for $10 in the team divisions and $1 for individuals (not including tax) in the singles divisions. Teams can also save $100 by paying the $125 yearly fee, which allows them to participate in Steve Martini, associate director of intramurals, said there are very few exceptions for those missing the deadline.

"We will take anyone who signs up prior to the deadline, but we can't take them beyond it unless there aren't enough entries in the sport," Martini said.

One sport that always has plenty of entries is flag football. Last fall, 40 more teams competed than in the 1990 season to raise the number to 186 teams, and it looks to be just as popular this season.

In the four intramural divisions — fraternity division, residence hall men, independent men and women's division

— 2,700 students participated in flag football. There are also co-rec teams, which are co-ed, but their winnings do not count for points toward team totals.

Of the 2,700 in flag football, more than 2,000 were men. The comparison is much the same when it comes to basketball — 2,200 men competed last year to only 450 women.

Martini said he can't tell whether intramural participation is increasing, but he said physical exercise is becoming more popular.

During the 1991-92 academic year, the Rec Complex had about 460,000 users, which is 25,000 more users than in the previous year. Of those users, many chose to compete in intramurals.

Martini said there is an intramural sport for nearly everyone, including everything from volleyball to miniature golf or inner-tube water polo.

"I think there is enough to do whether it's a team sport or an individual," Martini said. "We have something if they want to run, lift weights, swim. If they like to compete, there's an area to do it in."

VARIOUS ARTISTS — "Singles" soundtrack (Epic)

If you listen to Top 40 radio or aren't just have been assembled on the incredible out of touch with reality, you probably have heard of Pearl Jam.

If nothing else, the 18,000 plus fans at the University of Kansas' Day on the Hill have. Or if your tastes run to something a bit more towards the mind-numbing, how about Alice in Chains?

These groups, as well as other big Seattle bands - Mudhoney, the now-defunct Mother Love Bone, and Soundgarden - soundtrack to the movie "Singles."

You may think this is a CD-hyping of the much ballyhooed Seattle scene, but most of these songs were recorded and never released prior to the publicity. This album is well worth the $14.99 you have to plop down on the counter. The standouts are Pearl Jam's amazingly smooth and bubbly "Breath," Mother Love Bone's "Chloe Dancer/Crown of Thorns" and Alice in Chains' vision of metal, "Would?"

This album has surprising depth, most notably found with the inclusion of some of Seattle's grandmasters: Jimi Hendrix, and Ann and Nancy Wilson of Heart. You also can find some great tunes by Paul Westerberg, formerly with the Replacements, and a long, but really cool, guitar workout by the Smashing Pumpkins.

This one is definitely worth leaving in the CD player.

► HELMET — "Meantime" (Interscope)

What do you call a band that doesn't fit nice and neatly into any category?

Alternative is what most people would say, but Helmet is far too heavy for that label. The production on the album "Meantime" isn't quite up to par for most die-hard headbangers, who would probably consider the content on this album wimpy.

It doesn't matter what bin you find it in at the record store, because Helmet does manage to put it together and deliver some power-packed riffs that will leave your ears bleeding, and you begging for more. By the end of the album, the sound may get a bit monotonous, but it's still a good buy. Some of the notable tracks include "In the Meantime" and the punk-metal "Unsung."

I guess you could just call this band alternative metal with a punk edge, sort of like the Sex Pistols meet Iron Maiden meets Jane's Addiction.

Vet Med Complex gets Union cafeteria branch

Food Services opens dining area in Trotter Hall

BY THE COLLEGIAN STAFF

There is a new cafeteria on

K-State Union Food Service has opened a branch cafeteria in Trotter Hall in the Veterinary Medicine Complex.

The cafeteria was opened so faculty and students can have a convenient eating facility, said Malley Sisson, Union Food Service assistant director.

The cafeteria is open from 11:15 a.m. to 1:15 p.m. Monday through Friday. It serves a hot entree, soups, deli plates, two side dishes, desserts, salads and beverages - a menu similar to the one used in the Union stateroom.

Anyone may eat in the cafeteria, Sisson said, and it is more convenient for people in the Veterinary Medicine Complex to eat there rather than in the Union.

The cafeteria cost $1,500, Sisson said. Although some existing equipment was used, new dishes and silverware had to be purchased. The food is delivered from the Union daily and paper products aren't used.

Jean Sonnenfield, first-year student in veterinary medicine, said the cafeteria is a good idea.

The faculty and students get a food menu for the week, and Sonnenfield said she likes it because it is a balanced meal.

She said the cafeteria will be more popular in the winter than the warmer months because when the weather is nice, people bring their lunches and eat outside.

"The only problem with the cafeteria is the size. It's too small," Sonnenfield said.

In a survey last spring, the results showed that 600 people would need to be accommodated. The cafeteria only seats 112 people at present.

"I wanted to come and play at K-State, but they weren't so good then (in the 1987 season)," he said. "I wasn't as highly recruited as people thought. I had 10 to 12 schools that wanted me. I went to Arizona State for their tradition. I'm glad I came Transition to the defensive side has meant that Simoneau had to adjust to stopping the offense and not being a key player.

"I've learned to take on the double-team and to stay low to the ground," Simoneau said. "I can stay low, since I don't have as much women's movement. He compared Finney's achievements with those of Amelia Earhart and Nancy Kassebaum.

Finney praised the efforts of women in Kansas and the nation and said she was, "deeply proud of all women."

"America's heritage is richer for the participation of Kansas women," she said.

Finney said there are still many invisible barriers facing women today, and they will not be overcome until many attitudes are changed.

"But we must persevere," she Finney encouraged women to be prepared with the credentials and courage to seize every opportunity.

"Women make up 72 percent of all public school teachers but hold only 4.8 percent of the nation's superintendent positions - the highest policymaking positions in education," Finney said.

With 50 percent of school administrators projected to retire within the next ten years, Finney said she thinks there has never been a better opportunity for women's advancement.

She said women must continue to build on the examples set forth by the women of the late 20th century, like those who served in Operation Desert Storm, which led women to even higher grounds in the struggle for equality.

Neujahr, junior in pre-pharmacy, is committed to his school work as he earned his second Phillips 66 Academic All-Big Eight selection last season. For his hard work, the coaching staff has named him cocaptain.

But he shies from the spotlight.

"It's nice to get the publicity," Neujahr said, "but it might not get me into the NFL. There are only 28 teams that need a center. So, my chances are slim. That's why I study hard in school."

ISLAM AT A GLANCE The Arabic word Islam means peace, submission and obedience. The religion of Islam is the complete acceptance of the teachings and guidance of Allah (Arabic word for God, for which there is no plural or feminine gender) as revealed to His Prophet Muhammad, Peace Be Upon Him (PBUH).

A Muslim is one who believes in Allah and strives for total reorganization of his/her life according to His revealed guidance and the sayings of the Prophet. The Muslim also works for building human society on the same basis.

'Muhammadanism" is a misnomer for Islam and offends its very spirit.

Islam is not a new religion. It is, in essence, the same message and guidance which Allah revealed to all Prophets: "Say, we believe in Allah and that which has been revealed to us, and that which was revealed to Abraham and Ismael and Isaac and Jacob and the tribes and that which was given to Moses and Jesus and to the other Prophets, from their Lord. We make no distinction between any of them, and to Him (Allah) we submit." (Qura'n 3:83). The message which was revealed to Prophet Muhammad (PBUH) is Islam in its comprehensive, complete and final form. There are five pillars of Islam. 1. The declaration of faith: To bear witness that there is none worthy of worship except Allah, and that Muhammad is

His messenger to all human beings till the Day of Judgment. The Prophethood of Muhammad obliges the Muslims to follow his exemplary life as a model. 2. Prayers: Daily prayers are offered five times a day as a duty towards Allah. They strengthen and enliven the belief in

Allah and inspire man to a higher morality. They purify the heart and prevent temptation towards wrong-doings and

3. Fasting the month of Ramadan: The Muslims during the month of Ramadan not only abstain from food, drink, and sexual intercourse from dawn to sunset, but also from evil intentions and desires. It teaches love, sincerity, and devotion. It develops a sound social conscience, patience, unselfishness and will-power.

4. Zakat: To pay annually 2.5% of one's net saving on which a year has passed as a religious duty and purifying sum to be spent on poorer sections of the community. 5. Pilgrimage to Makkah: It is to be performed once a lifetime, if one can afford it financially and physically.

Besides these pillars every action performed with the awareness that it fulfills the will of Allah is considered an act of worship. Islam enjoins faith in the oneness and sovereignty of Allah, which makes man aware of the meaningfulness of the Universe and of his place in it. This belief frees him from all fears and superstitions by making him conscious of the presence of the almighty Allah and of man's obligations towards Him.

This faith must be expressed and tested in action. Faith alone is not enough. Belief in one God requires that we look upon all humanity as one family under the universal omnipotence of God - the Creator and Nourisher of all. Islam rejects the idea of a chosen people, making faith in Allah and good action the only way to heaven. Thus, a direct relationship is established with Allah (God), without any intercessor.

Muslim Community Association.

DAY 2 — (Delilah meets Sputnik's

After a long, hard day of harvesting on the mayonnaise farm, Sputnik's father, Neopolitan, decides to leave Kiev and drive into the big city to see his only son's brother. When he arrives at Sputnik's bachelor pad at 4 a.m., he notices not ONE, but TWO people hiding under the blankets. Neopolitan is not one bit amused when he notices right away that Delilah sleeps with her socks off!!!

"We never, EVER sleep with our socks off in Kiev!" shouts Neopolitan. "You can

Flight ban enforced with U.S. warplanes

ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — U.S. warplanes swooped into southern Iraq Thursday to enforce a coalition ban on all flights by Iraqi aircraft.

Saddam Hussein's government denounced the no-fly zone and threatened retaliation in due time. However, the Pentagon said no Iraqi planes had challenged the prohibition of flights below the 32nd parallel.

Pentagon spokesman Bob Hall, speaking at a news conference almost two hours after the 10:15 a.m. EDT ban went into effect, said, "As of this moment, or as of about five minutes ago, there has been no activity to prevent the monitoring regime that we've undertaken."

He said F-18s, based on the aircraft carrier Independence, and F-15 fighters were patrolling the skies of southern Iraq, and the military was adding to its AWAC and RC-135 reconnaissance plane force in the Persian Gulf theater. British and French planes are moving into the region to participate, Hall said.

President Bush announced the ban on Wednesday, saying one purpose was to prevent any attacks on coalition surveillance planes monitoring Iraqi military activities in the marshlands of southern Iraq. Bush accused Saddam of attacking the Shiite people of southern Iraq, a violation of U.N. Resolution 688 that requires Iraq to cease all suppression of its citizens.

Shiite Muslims, who make up 55 percent of Iraq's population, were crushed when they rose up against Hussein following the Gulf War defeat, but they have kept up guerrilla operations based in the south. The Iraqi military has recently stepped up its attacks on the region.

More than 20 American aircraft patrolled southern Iraq, with some flying escorts for British Tornadoes that help monitor the special Pilots returning from the flights said no one fired any air-to-ground missiles or was locked onto by Iraqi radar, although aircraft flew over roads, rivers, airports and known surface-to-air missile sites.

Pentagon sources, speaking on condition of anonymity, said they fully expect Saddam's forces to test the U.S. and allied resolution with possible cat-and-mouse ploys, perhaps by flying aircraft just over or quite near the border of the no-fly zone.

However, Hall said that so far the Iraqis were avoiding confrontation. He also said Iraq had moved all its fixed-wing aircraft and most or all of its helicopters above the 32nd parallel.

He said that of 40 flights on Thursday, all were above the line, and only two of 95 flights Turbo, a 5-month-old cat, stoically undergoes a flea-dip at the Little Apple Veterinary Clinic Thursday. Fleas thrived on the area's recent wet weather.

Please, no more fleas

HEATHER ANDERSON

My doe has fleas

Students singing this familiar childhood tune are not alone. Many Manhattan residents are fighting neverending battles with the pet-loving parasites.

"In the last 30 days, we've seen a dramatic increase in cases," said Dr. William Fortney, assistant professor of veterinary medicine at the K-State Small Animal Clinic. Although the case total for the summer seems slightly

Although the case total for the summer seems slightly down from previous years, Fortney said he is now seeing "hotbeds of fleas."

The recent increase in flea population is credited to above-average precipitation in Manhattan in July, said Dr. Michael Dryden, assistant professor of veterinary medicine in the new department of pathology and microbiology. Dryden is the only flea biology researcher in the United States.

A female flea lays between 30 and 40 eggs a day during its life cycle, Dryden said. Normally, only four or five of every 1,000 eggs survive to adulthood. Many die during the second stage of life, the larval stage, which requires at least 50 percent humidity for survival.

Most larvae live in carpeting, which can reach up to 90 percent humidity at times, he said.

"One of the reasons the flea problem has risen in the last few decades is the predominance of wall-to-wall shag carpeting," he said.

Because this July was one of the wettest months on record, he said, many more flea larvae survived the crucial period. Following the larval stage, the fleas form a cocoon and mature into adult fleas, which may take several weeks. Because of this time lapse, Dryden said, the adult fleas are now a problem.

Adult flea populations will naturally decrease as fall approaches, Dryden said.

"In Kansas, the air in the winter is very dry, and it eliminates the problem because the larvae can't survive," he said.

Dryden said the cat flea, which is the common flea that infects cats and dogs in the United States, originated in Africa in a jungle-like environment.

Until the humidity decreases, however, fleas are still a nuisance for pets and owners. Pet owners spent $871 million last year in the United States to kill fleas, he said.

Fleas rarely carry diseases, Fortney said, but they cause severe discomfort to the animals infected. Those animals allergic to the bites suffer even more, he said.

Spraying and dipping the animals will provide temporary relief, but the only way to control the problem is to treat the environment.

"You have to look at the whole flea problem," he said.
"Most fleas are in the environment, in the form of larva or premature fleas, or even adult fleas waiting for the Fortney said he recommends using a combination of a house fogger and spraying or dipping the animal. Also, treating the outdoor environment is important, although only shady and damp areas need to be treated.

Dryden recommends foggers and sprays that include insect-growth regulators, which is often indicated on the label. In addition to the insecticides that are applied to kill adult fleas, the regulator prevents the eggs and larvae

Construction of the library is slated to be completed within four years, while the Rec Complex is expected to be finished within two years.

In other Senate business, a first reading of a motion designed to carry over $595 from the 1992 fiscal year budget to the 1993 budget was heard.

The purpose of the motion would serve as a defrayment of cost senators incur during their retreat this weekend. Current cost per senator is $22.50,

A damaging windstorm hit Concordia in late June and moved on. That's when Jardine Terrace Apartment residents came in to Fifteen Jardine residents drove to Concordia June 26 to offer victims

They took with them almost 1,000 pounds of food, which was collected from Jardine residents, to replenish the Concordia Food Bank.

C. Charles Walters, executive mayor for Jardine and junior in political science and history, said he partially credited KSNT-TV in Topeka for motivating him to organize the efforts.

"KSNT released the story they shot live from Concordia watching this, a volunteer said, 'Well, our biggest challenge is that our people are getting tired,"" Walters said. "'We're running out of people and there is so much to do.' So I said, we're a public service organization, there's no reason we can't pitch in with some American Red Cross chapters from Wichita, Salina, Kansas City and Topeka were also brought in to assist the Cloud County chapter.

"Our chapter is kind of small, so

> When the Jardine group arrived in Concordia, the Red Cross volunteers divided the group in two.

> "Half our volunteers helped clean up what was left of the trailer park. I've never seen anything like this. The trailers were twisted and broken and wrapped around things, it was awful," Walters said.

Pieces of homes were picked up and thrown in trucks. "The other half helped a particular older lady repair her roof. The storm ripped the roof right off," Walters said. Her home was built in 1872, and after the storm, the volunteers did not feel the home was repairable. "We talked to Red Cross about trying to help her move out. Hopefully she's out by now," said Sherry Askew, Jardine mayor of F, G. J. and K and senior in elementary education.

This is the first time Jardine has left town for a public service event. Other service projects include an international festival, recycling and donating the proceeds to the Salvation Army, and educational events such as stress management, resume planning, cardiopulmonary resuscitation (CPR) and a story

In the future, Walters said, they would like to have an aerobics instructor come to Jardine to teach ngineering student? Smart. Math or science major? Also smart.

On tests, you probably run equations over again to make sure they're right. So you're working harder.

You don't have to do that anymore. Not when you use the TI-68 Advanced Scientific or TI-85 Graphics Calculator, with their last equation replay feature - and many other smart functions.

We've spent years with students like you and educators like your professors to develop the TI-68 and the TI-85. That's why they're so highly recommended.

For engineering students, the TI-68 solves up to five simultaneous equations, has complex number functions and offers formula programming.

The TI-85 builds on the power of the TI-68 by adding a wide range of graphing capabilities. Math students can handle calculus problems more easily. And technical students can see the functions for a better understanding of problems.

complex numbers. Matrices. Vectors. Lists. Strings. Plus, it offers a powerful one-equation

Try a TI-68 or TI-85 at your local TI retailer today. And start working smarter. Instead of harder.

IN OUR OPINION

AUGUST 28, 1992

By the Collegian Editorial Board

Voters: Demand satisfaction

THE ISSUE

A large segment of society has become resentful about elections in general.

WE SUGGEST

People need to take the initiative. research the candidates and demand debate on the key issues that affect us all.

It's now up to our generation.

Americans, especially in the 18-25 age group, have become overly cynical about the political system these days.

But we've a right to be dubious. Born during the Nixon years, our earliest political memories were of former presidents Gerald Ford and Then came the Gipper, former President Ronald Reagan. Expecting a leader, we received instead the biggest tax increases in history, Iran-Contra, Red Dawn and the fear of nuclear Armageddon.

Eight years later, we watched the nation elect President Bush because of a promise of no new taxes, right? Wrong.

And in between the saga of presidential clowns, there was former Sen. Gary Hart, Oliver North and the ever-irresponsible Sen. Ted Kennedy to reinforce our pessimism.

So we have a right to be cynical, to not care and not vote, right?

Wrong again. Because our parents and grandparents do vote.

They decided former Gov. Michael Dukakis had a funny accent and name, so they voted in Gipper II, President Bush.

They voted in the people who have run America into the ground.

It's time to wake up, Generation Now.

America isn't No. 1 anymore. Apple pie and yellow ribbons won't solve our problems.

It's now up to us. We have to snap out of our self-pitying mode and vote.

We have to take charge. If Generation Now were to vote en masse, we could be the most powerful lobby in the nation.

If every single one of the 20,000 K-State students were to vote, we could make a difference in a close election. We could persuade politicians to fund education, clean up the environment and even clean up their own acts.

If you don't like either presidential candidate - Bill Clinton or Bush - vote for the Libertarian candidate.

Or, at least think before you judge. Do your own research on Clinton and Bush. Learn for yourself which is the better of two evils, and vote

But don't be caught sitting on your attitude come Nov. 3.

Be informed. Demand pertinent issues from the media, not stories on sexual high jinks. Demand answers, not attacks on Hillary Clinton and family values.

The deadline to register to vote in the general election is October 19. Don't wait until the last minute, register today.

Now.

READERS WRITE

CENSORSHIP

Columnist misses ideas of separation

Editor,

After I finished throwing up, I felt compelled to write concerning John Hart's column "Civil liberties groups are real censors.

Mr. Hart says the most censored group is the Judeo-Christians. What Mr. Hart has failed to realize, however, is that the lawn of a courthouse is state property. The nativity scene is church. Find me an example of the ACLU banishing the nativity scene from the shopping mall. You can't do it. But I can find a lot of pinhead religious types who step into schools and censor Apparently, none of these people have ever read the Bible. It's one of the most violent books ever written. It condones murder, incest, sexism, cannibalism, and slavery. If you don't believe me, just read it.

I quote Article 6, Section 8 of the Kansas Constitution: "No religious sect or sects shall ever control any part of the common school or university funds of the

This is separation of church and state.

To end this, I'll state the following: I'm an atheist. And if I ever become a dad, I'll raise my child to be an atheist. And believe that I will not put up with any superstitious religion in my child's school.

Beef is victim of bad rap, missing facts

I am writing in response to the July 30 editorial. The article, "Beef for real people - not" presented several opinions. I call them that because I know that they aren't facts from the classes I've taken.

The main objective of the editorial, if I understand, was to convince people that beef is bad for you. I'll agree that almost anything in excess is bad for one's health. While vegetarian diets do provide more fiber and less cholesterol, meats provide B vitamins and iron not available through vegetarian diets.

A comment was made that "Cattle screw the environment." On the contrary, cattle provide many services, including controlling overgrowth of prairie through careful management, just to name one.

The editorial said, "beef is a mere luxury," which, in a way, is true. My concern, though, is that the article was printed without research done to support the ideas given, and people who read such editorials may believe

Football's no good

LISA EDMUNDS

's that time of year again. I Being the main outlet for don't have to consult a calendar to know that fall is here — all I have to do is venture outside and observe the parade of lunacy that passes by my front door.

Yes, the natives have gone stark-raving mad once more: It must be football season.

I'm tempted to say that I hate football, that I loathe football season, but that's not true. It's not the sport that I truly detest, but all the testosterone-laden rituals that go along with the spectator end of the sport.

Surely this love/hate relationship with football began early in life. My dad is a rabid fan of the Cleveland Browns, and he too had his rituals. His sacred Sunday afternoons in front of the television were frustrating for the rest of the family, but not a real Thankfully, Dad is a quiet football fan. So, all that was required of the rest of the family was to help him dodge phone calls for the duration of the game, and maybe refill his snack bowl or bring him a beer.

It meant accepting that your father would lapse into a selfinduced coma for three hours every Sunday afternoon. If you wanted to spend quality time with him, he was always happy to give you a running commentary or explain the rules of the game. But, it was no time to ask for help with math homework.

Nice old guys like my dad hanging out in front of the TV, I can handle. It's the wild-child school of fanaticism that I really

I had my first exposure to football hell in high school. I attended a Catholic high school in Ohio that recruited kids from all over the region to play sports, and these folks were far too impressed with athletic achievement. Give me a pep rally for the National Merit Scholars any day.

These people were so into football, we used to have a special mass on the morning of the big game, praying for victory.

The Friday night game was the big social event for everyone.

socializing, you almost had to attend, but I could never get into the whole "scream-'till-you-puke" mode. Watching Sister Margaret out on the field in full habit screaming for blood was a surreal experience I may never recover

Figuring this Neanderthal approach to the game was a highschool thing, I was happy to get to college and find that I could avoid the whole ritual. As an undergrad, I simply ignored the sports section of the paper and let the season pass without notice.

Such is not the case in Manhattan. Last year's football season can only be described as "Nightmare on Vattier Street." The behavior (or rather misbehavior) of overzealous Wildcat fans turned the neighborhoods near Aggieville into a scene only Freddy Krueger could imagine.

The entire season was filled with incidents and insults, but the weekend of the KU game will live in infamy. You have to wonder if old Charles Darwin witnessed a K-State/KU football game. It would have blown the hell out of his evolution theories.

Literally, there were masses dancing in the streets. There was no need to turn on the radio to hear the game, as it and Garth Brooks blasted up and down the avenue at ear-shattering decibels.

It wasn't even safe to run across the street to the local Stop-N-Rob for a pack of cigarettes, as innocent folks were harassed and accosted by drunken football fans. They brought chairs into the yard just to sit and yell abusive comments at anyone who wasn't hip enough to be as cool as

All in all, it was real terror. Even the cops weren't much help. It was after 1 a.m. before they cracked down on the noise. Apparently football themselves, they took the "boysattitude, will-be-boys" perpetuating and encouraging the wild-child behavior.

As I ventured outside the next morning to pick up 33 beer cans, five wine bottles and two drunks

Myths, half-truths run riot around the subject of rape

destimates that one in every three women will be sexually assaulted at some point in their lifetimes.

Shocking? It should be. Moreover, the beginning of each school year provides a risk of sexual assault to unsuspecting women in their first like to believe semester of college. It is during that time of year when the nationwide frequency of acquaintance rape surges.

Many men offer justification for the fact that rape occurs. Incredibly, there is a repertoire of disturbing myths circulating among the male members of society designed to perpetuate the patriarchal mindset that says rape is

The first myth is that women secretly desire to be raped, to be overpowered and abused in a violent, spontaneous rage. The false assumption here is that rape is an act of sexual expression.

On the contrary, rape is an act of violent aggression entrenched in men to exercise power over women. It's not a biological phenomenon — it's a learned behavior. The "women-secretly-desireit" myth is a lie designed to remove the basic worth of women as distinct individuals

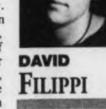

A second common myth is "justified rape," the notion that women bring rape upon themselves. Men use nonverbal indicators - the way a woman is dressed, the people she associates with, or the fact that she consumes alcohol in the company of male companions - as an intention to have sexual intercourse.

The fact is that women should be able to make choices concerning their own appearance and their own activities very six minutes, someone in the without risking being raped. not, there are many instances where United States is raped. The FBI Responding to rape victims with "you universities have attempted to play asked for it" is a classic example of blaming the victim.

A third myth perpetuated by male culture is one centering on the occurrence of date rape. Men that when a woman says "no," she really means "yes. Oftentimes, "no" is interpreted as sexual foreplay. When men proceed. regardless of whether further refusal occurs, the act of rape has been committed.

At the root of the "no-means-yes" myth is that a large percentage of males don't view date rape as actual rape.

What's needed is some way of clearly identifying the crime. In essence, the act of rape functions as an act of coercion. Women do not have to scream, kick, punch, bruise or bleed for rape to occur. The absence of consent on the part of the woman is all

The bottom line: Just because a woman consents to a date, she is not consenting to sexual intercourse.

Debunking the popular myths of why rape occurs is only the beginning. Another approach is finding a solution.

The first step is recognizing that a problem does indeed exist. Believe it or down and even cover up incidents of student sexual assault. College administrators, attempting to minimize negative publicity, try to preserve the image and reputation of their institution.

A second step toward developing a solution involves making rape awareness and prevention programs available for students. They are available to K-State students, undoubtedly serving a vital function.

Nevertheless, such services offer only a partial solution. Telling women they should never walk alone at night and should be careful of what they say, wear, and do only places the sole responsibility of rape prevention on women. In the end, the same stereotype that women are responsible if rape occurs is only reinforced.

For as much as women do to protect themselves, it is the men who need to take some responsibility, because they are the aggressors.

What can men do? Stop perpetuating the male myth that rape can somehow be justified. Strive toward changing socialization patterns.

Even in Manhattan, men are socialized to believe it's good to be sexually aggressive - to "score." Relationships built on male dominance and female passivity must be questioned and altered. Moreover, organizations built upon the foundations of brotherhood and macho masculinity should be criticized and modified.

Only when men become a part of the movement against the terror of sexual violence can progress be made toward

S.H.A.R.E. helps underprivileged in Manhattan

Volunteers keep organization alive and working KIM MCNITT

The S.H.A.R.E. program fulfills its name by helping underprivileged people in Manhattan.

The Self-Help and Resource Exchange is helping people who need assistance by collecting and distributing household goods and used clothing in good condition.

The program was established in Hills Junior Service League, an international service organization. The Flint Hills chapter serves the Manhattan, Fort Riley, Wamego and Junction City areas.

"It's my understanding that S.H.A.R.E. was the original brainchild of the League of Women Voters, who had seen the program in another community," said Mary Catherine Tennant, chairwoman of program is staffed completely by volunteers. Most are Junior Service League members, community are needed.

Tennant is helped by two assistant chairmen and a committee of Junior Service League members. S.H.A.R.E. also works with the Manhattan Emergency Shelter and the Flint Hills Breadbasket. Most of the volunteers are employed full time, so, time to devote to S.H.A.R.E. is limited, she said.

"Presently, the center is open three times a month. We would like to expand that, which is why we are seeking new volunteers," Tennant

The S.H.A.R.E. center accepts household goods, kitchen items, sheets, towels, all types of clothing, toys, books and games. Household goods are especially needed now, she said. In addition, the center acts as a referral service for donations and people who need furniture and appliances. It asks all donations be clean and in working condition.

Families who need items go "shopping" on the distribution dates. The center asks that people take only what they need for themselves. A list is kept of items donated and of those distributed.

The center has been able to serve large amounts of people in the small time it has been open. In August, 189 people (more than 50 families) were helped in two Saturdays. On one Saturday in July, 122 people (32 families) were served. Families may only shop once a month.

"Some of the families are regular shoppers, but some of those people bring the best donations," Tennant said, explaining that after the clothes have been outgrown, they are often brought back. "It's really neat. They only take what they need and make sure it's in good shape when they return it,"

Some K-State students are already involved with the program. "We had a good response from last year's class. So, we're doing it again," Marlo said.

The center, at 901 Yuma St., will be receiving donations from 6 p.m. to 9 p.m. Oct. 1 and 7.

Season ticket sales up by 3,000

More than 4,000 students bought season football tickets during fee payment last week, bringing the total tickets sold to 12,200.

That's 3,000 more than were sold by this time last year. A total of 4,350 passes have been purchased by students - 4,1000 at fee payment.

There are three weeks left until the season begins. Five home games are scheduled.

"We're pleased with the sale up to today, in particular with our student ticket sales," Associate Athletic Director Jim Epps said.

The athletic department was also pleased with the large percentage of tickets bought at fee payment, Epps said.

"I think because of the convenience factor - to just add it on to the fees - many students took advantage of it," Epps said.

Epps said the department hopes to sell 15,000 season tickets before the season starts in three weeks.

Traditionally, the rush on tickets peaks close to the first game.

Based on the sold season tickets, Epps said the 42,000-seat KSU Stadium should be filled for the team's home opener against Montana Sept. 19.

'We're making the effort to get a full stadium against Montana. We hope to set a standard for the remaining games," he said. "Ideally, we want the stadium filled up for each game. Realistically, we like to see crowds in the 30,000s."

Season tickets are available from the ticket office at Bramlage Coliseum until the end of next week. Tickets can be purchased at the K-State Union Sept. 8-18.

K-State students with valid IDs pay $35 for the season pass. Tickets for the general public are

Lacrosse gets TV time

The Wildcat football team won't be the only K-State squad enjoying newfound television exposure during the 1992 season - the lacrosse team will as well.

The Bleachers Sports Bar and Grill has agreed to sponsor this year's squad and will televise each home game immediately following the contest on its 6-foot by 8-foot big-screen television.

"I looked at this as a good opportunity to present our name to the public," said Brad Meyer, co-owner and manager of Bleachers. "This will be good for us.

Bleachers, which has been in Manhattan for only a year, also footed the bill for 100 lacrosse T-shirts. All profits will go straight to the team.

The squad, which was sponsored a year ago by Pyramid Pizza, is excited about the opportunity to view the games on television.

"We appreciate all that Bleachers has done for us," said Tondo Waldron, who struck up the deal with the bar and was last year's leading scorer. "The TV is awesome."

The television, however, isn't the only thing Waldron said the squad is excited about. It also provides a place for the Cats to enjoy a cool one after the match.

"It's great to have a place where the guys can go out after the game," Waldron said. "They have a pool table, and they serve beer. Those are our priorities.

"The veterans are excited," he said. The K-State team won't be the only players at the bar after the battle - the Wildcats plan on bringing the opposing team, as well.

Sponsoring a sport like lacrosse and serving them after the home games is an opportunity Bleachers welcomes, Meyer

"Lacrosse is something that is growing around here," he said. "If it were something like the Hackey-Sack team, I might not be as excited. But lacrosse has been attracting more and more fans.

And the lacrosse team needed an opportunity like this to keep its head above water financially, Waldron said.

The squad, which was allotted $596 from the University for the entire season, had to exercise other options for financial

DEION WILL FINISH THE YEAR

ATLANTA (AP) — Deion Sanders decided Thursday to remain with the Atlanta Braves through the end of the baseball season. The Pro Bowl cornerback will miss the Atlanta Falcons' first six games and as many as eight if the Braves make the playoffs and World Series.

"It turned out OK for us," said Braves general manager John Schuerholz after meeting with Sanders's agent, Eugene Parker, before Atlanta's game Thursday night against Montreal.

"We didn't get a long-term deal, but he's going to be with us for the rest of the year," he said. "He'll be eligible for all postseason games if we are fortunate to get into the playoffs and the World Series."

▶ ROYALS END LOSING STREAK

ARLINGTON, Texas (AP) — George Brett had three singles and drove in two runs as the Kansas City Royals rolled to a 7-2 victory over Nolan Ryan and the Texas Rangers Thursday night.

Brett has 1,509 RBI and is tied with Mickey Mantle for 33rd on the all-time list. He now has 2,965 hits and passed Sam Crawford for 19th place on the all-

Ryan (5-8) lost his fifth consecutive decision, allowing seven runs on seven hits in four 2-3 innings. He walked three and struck out five. It tied the most runs he has given up in a Texas uniform.

The Colts are coming to town

GAME:

The Chiefs take on the Colts tonight. Kickoff is at 7 p.m. in Arrowhead Stadium.

ASSOCIATED PRESS

KANSAS CITY- For every bit of confidence Kansas City generated for itself with a sound thrashing of Buffalo Monday night, there is a cloud of doubt for the Indianapolis

The Colts come to Kansas City tonight with a new coach, a 1-2 exhibition record and - worst of all - an injured quarterback.

Jeff George is out for four weeks with an injured thumb, Colts doctors said. George says he will be back sooner. George also says he'll be ready to start the season opener, but even Coach Ted Marchiboda said he doesn't believe that.

Mark Herrmann will start in George's place, but the Bills, faced with the prospect of having him backed up by Tom Tupa, finally agreed to terms with holdout Jack Trudeau Thursday.

The Chiefs, meanwhile, are set after a 35-0 pounding of the Bills. Frontline players will likely see little if any action against Indianapolis in the final exhibition game for both teams as Coach Marty Schottenheimer rests his regulars for the regular season opener Sept. 6.

The game will be the last before the final cutdown to 47 players on Monday.

Indianapolis then will open the regular season at home against Cleveland while Kansas City goes at San Diego.

Herrmann started the second half of Indianapolis' 34-14 victory in the exhibition opener and completed 12 of 15 passes, but has been ineffective since. Tupa is 17 of 35 for 234 yards and has thrown two interceptions.

Indianapolis also lost defensive back Eugene Daniel in a 20-0 loss to Cincinnati on Saturday with a sprained ligament in his knee. It is not known when he will return.

The Colts played poorly against the Bengals, who held the ball for about 24 minutes of the second half, including more than 13 minutes of the fourth quarter.

Ken Clark is leading Indianapolis backs with 88 yards on 14 carries, while Reggie Langhorne leads receivers with 11 catches for 120 yards. Kansas City is still basking in the glow of the defeat of Buffalo on Monday night on national television. The Chiefs seemed to come together at the end of training camp, and the 30-0 beating by Minnesota in the second exhibition game Aug. 15 is a distant memory.

Dave Krieg, a Plan B signee from Seattle, is the No. 1 quarterback after completing nine of 10 passes against the Bills for 160 yards. Mark Vlasic is the backup and the Chiefs are pleased with the progress of rookie Matt Blundin.

The Chiefs are developing a logjam at running back after signing Christian Okoye after the Buffalo game. Kansas City has 1,000-yard backs in Okoye and Barry Word.

SI does K-State right

-State football was the subject of national attention three years ago. Prior to the 1989 campaign, Sports Illustrated featured K-State in an article titled "Futility U." The story focused on the Wildcats' record as the worst team in Division I football history. And with a 27game winless streak at the time, who would Strange, how things change.

Since that time, K-State has gone from being laughable to being respectable.

After halting the nation's longest losing streak at 30 in 1989, the Cats bounced to 5-6 in 1990. Last season's 7-4 was the Wildcats' best in 37 years. K-State also enters the season with seven consecutive wins over non-ranked foes. Forget respectable, how about good?

MAY

At weekly news conferences, talk of a bowl game has replaced chuckles that used to occur at the mention of Austin Peay, Northern Iowa and Louisiana Tech. Three years have passed since Sports Illustrated ran that now-infamous article by Douglas Looney. And this week, Looney updates the country on the progress being made at K-State.

A Wildcat fan will learn nothing new from the piece; however, much of the country will and not just about the football team.

Not only is the rags-to-riches story of the football team noted, but mentions of Rhodes, Truman and Goldwater scholars make for an all-encompassing view of the University. Even the debate team receives a mention in the four-page spread that looks like it could be right out of a K-State recruiting guide.

Looney ties the success of the football team and University together. This is not your typical sports-magazine article.

Sports Illustrated is not the only one paying attention to Wildcat football. Last season, Bill Snyder was named National Coach of the Year by ESPN, the same network that said in 1990 that K-State could never turn it around. And this spring, K-State had three players drafted in the NFL, and two others signed as free agents.

Even the Big-Eight writers got into the act this season by ending a three-year trend of picking the Wildcats to finish in the conference cellar. This season's fifth-place pick by the media is the highest since 1983.

It seems perceptions are starting to change.

Somewhere between "Dances With Wolves," "Lethal Weapon III" and "Three Amigos" lies "Thunderheart," the film showing this weekend at the K-State Union.

"Thunderheart" is the story of FBI agent Ray Levoi (Val Kilmer) investigating a murder on the Bear Creek Indian Reservation in the South Dakota Badlands, which was filmed on location. Levoi is sent because he is part Sioux, and along the way he discovers the culture and pride that accompany his heritage.

Kilmer delivers a solid. performance as Levoi, displaying emotions from being part of the world of the conqueror (the U.S. government) to realizing his integral role in the world of the conquered (the Sioux).

Interim band director sets goals to increase hype, get crowd more involved

BY THE COLLEGIAN STAFF

The K-State Marching Band lost its leader of nine years when Stan Finck, director of bands, retired effective June 1.

Brad Bone, former band director at Wichita State University, was hired as the new band director but asked to be released from his contract because of health reasons.

Assistant band director Ben Rohrer was selected to take the position on an interim basis for the 1992-93 school year.

Having been Finck's assistant director of bands for the last four years, Rohrer is familiar with the band and the staff. He filled in for Finck during his illness last year.

"I feel like it's my second year," Rohrer said.

Band member Jon Thummel, raduate student in public administration, said the change from Finck to Rohrer was not difficult for members of the band to

"Mr. Rohrer handled most of the details last year. It wasn't that big of a deal," he said.

Rohrer has plans to make the band more exciting and more

Rohrer attributes the band's success to his staff. Assistants Jim Strain and Jim Sharp are two of the best in the business, Rohrer said, and John Long and Sherri Senter are valuable graduate assistants.

"They work very hard. The delegation process works very well," said Rohrer.

Although comfortable with his interim position, Rohrer said he misses Finck's leadership.

"I'll be consulting him a lot throughout the year. He's one of the Highlights of the 1992 band include Band Day Sept. 19, an appearance Sept. 28 in Kansas City when the Chiefs play the Raiders, and an Oct. 10 appearance in Lawrence when K-State plays KU.

Rohrer served as band director at Cloud County Community College in Concordia before coming to K-State. That sparked his interest in teaching band on a collegiate level, he said.

"That got me started thinking of teaching higher education. College level musicians attain a higher level of musicianship," he said.

Rohrer directs the band from atop a ladder Thursday afternoon.

Former debater goes international

JULIE WHITE Collegian

The K-State Debate program has added another first to its list of accomplishments.

Bill Boggs, former K-State debater, has been selected as one of two Americans to represent the United States on the Committee on International Discussion and Debate Tour.

The eight-week tour, sponsored by the Speech Committee Association, a large national association, will cover five countries. "The British Tour, our tour, makes five stops. We stop in England, Scotland, Wales,

Ireland and Northern Ireland."

Boggs said. Boggs said the British participate in debate societies.

which meet weekly, in contrast to the team format used in the United States. The two Americans will be guests at the meetings, which also feature debates between prominent politicians and world leaders.

The duo will represent the United States in the World Student Debate Competition in January in London.

While at K-State, Boggs was champion of the Heart of America tournament at the University of Kansas and champion of the Central State tournament in Oklahoma.

He was a member of the debate team, which received third at nationals, and he was third speaker at nationals during his senior year.

A new treatment is in the form of a mousse. Cats are more willing to be treated in this manner, he said.

However, pet owners need to take caution and not overmedicate the animal.

"Especially with cats, you need to follow all the label directions and never apply the product in any way other than directed," Dryden said.

K-State gets 3-year Boys State contract

The Boys State coordinating committee recently signed a threeyear commitment to have its annual conference on the K-State campus.

K-State was host to Boys State for the first time in June, because of a scheduling conflict at the University of Kansas, where the conference has been for 27 years, said Scott Johnson, assistant professor of animal sciences and

Johnson has been involved in 1992, he served as Boys State adviser and helped in selecting the host school.

"K-State did a fantastic job of providing maintenance, serving meals and presenting services that were not part of the conference costs," Johnson said.

In addition, he said, K-State's bid for Boys State was less expensive than KU's proposal.

"Previously, there have been problems at KU with facilities and Boys State since 1979, when he was inflexible scheduling," he said. "Ka delegate to the conference for selected high school seniors. In carpet, and KU jerked it out from under us a few years ago," Johnson

> Boys State gives the K-State a chance to expose 700 upcoming high school seniors to the campus and let them experience university life, said Robert Burgess, assistant director of housing. It also gives the University the opportunity to recruit future students, he said.

> "We provided the housing and facilities for the conference," Burgess said. "The students had meetings in the residence halls and dining centers and also utilized McCain Auditorium, All Faiths Chapel and the Chester E. Peters Recreation Complex."

Participants of Boys State, which is sponsored by the American Legion, act as citizens of a fictitious state and are divided into mock county and city governments. The students serve on committees and experience legislative meetings.

"Boys State gives us a chance to develop leaders, which benefits the state of Kansas as well as K-State,"

Armed forces recruiting becoming selective

Numbers remain steady as quality, standards increase

MARTI GIACOBE

The search for a few good men and women is getting tougher as the military reduces total size. Recruiters have higher standards for today's prospective members.

"The Army still has a need to recruit individuals," said Staff Sgt. Duane Jackson, Army recruiting station manager in Manhattan. "It's the mid-career people that are leaving, not the privates."

At the Navy recruiting office, business is not as easy as it was a

"We are recruiting about the armed same numbers, but the qualifications are going up," Petty Officer 1st Class Chuck Schmitz

The local Air Force recruiter has seen goals of two or three contracts a month increased to four or five a

"We're looking for everything in the Air Force," said Staff Sgt. Randy Ross, Air Force recruiter. "We have opportunities for highschool grads, people with some college and college grads.

"The cutbacks aren't affecting who and how many we're recruiting," Ross said. "We still have to fill from the bottom up. The doors are not shut."

The Marines are looking for recruits who are even more qualified than those of just a few

"The Marine Corps has again

enlistment," said Sgt. Charlotte Billings, U.S. Marine Corps public relations representative. "And while the Marine Corps is still the country's rapid-deployment strikeforce, today's brand of hightech warfare demands sharper, more intelligent troops, even for the grunt on the ground.

"The present Marine Corps

graduates and people with some college or technical training, recruiters said.

"Officer programs for the college graduates are looking for engineers, nurses, doctors; everybody except for pilots," Ross said. "The best bet to get into pilot training is to graduate from the Air Force Academy.'

Trained and educated recruits continue to have advantages in entering the armed services.

"The Army is offering a lot of incentives to people with some college in the form of college loan repayments and even cash bonuses for enlistment," Jackson said.

'Specialty jobs like medically trained people and mechanics are really what we're looking for," raised its qualification standards for Jackson said. "We're looking for

Some recruiters are finding recruiting challenging since the end of the gulf war and the fall of the

"We go into a high school to recruit, and a lot of the kids think that we don't need anybody any more," Schmitz said. "Hey, we're still recruiting."

Competition for the smaller numbers of Navy openings is

"With average scores of only 38 and recent requirements of a score of 50 on the Armed Forces Qualification Test, it's hard to fill those openings," Schmitz said.

"We have people that get 30s on had somebody get as low as a 7, and that person was a high-school graduate.

The standards for admission to all armed services are higher than in past years, but that doesn't mean the military is out of the recruiting

"I have nine openings in the Army for active duty and reserves this month. I'm recruiting," Jackson

DAY 3 — "Someone comes a knockin'"

Delilah and Sputnik are sitting in Sputnik's apartment watching a Redskin's football game and thinking of how they could get Neopolitan to accept her, when there is a knock at the door. Instinctively, they both run and hide - trying to pretend that they aren't home.

"Delilah?" echoes a faint voice from beind the door.

"Wolfgang?" screams Delilah as she sprints for the door.

"Who is HE?" shouts Sputnik as he quickly notices that the Redskins have a first down on the 49ers' 12-yard line.

"Oh, he is just my father's cousin's coach's son's favorite babysitter's dentist's second son's best friend. We met at the Yugo dealership in Munich about three years ago.

Should Sputnik believe her? Should he allow her to open the door, and let her friend in? Just who is this friend, and what does he want? Will the Redskins run an off-tackle play, or try to get a touchdown through the air? Sorry, folks, but you have to wait until Monday's Collegian for the answers.

ANDY WOODWARD

Saturday's 12th annual Welcome Back Concert was something less than a financial success, said Kim Harms, Union Program Council adviser.

"There were about 625 people there. We were really hoping for a better crowd," Harms said.

The concert at Memorial Stadium was sponsored in part by KSDB-FM 91.9 and UPC's Special Events Committee. One of the committee's goals was to program the concert especially for K-State students, Harms said.

The lackluster attendance puts Special Events in a financial Catch-22. The committee spent most of its budget on the concert.

"Special Events took a hit on this one. We can't get a bigger name until we get more money," Harms said.

Florida picks up the pieces

PERRINE, Fla. - Pastors and churchgoers heard messages of hope and thanks Sunday in Hurricane Andrew's aftermath, while hundreds of thousands sought relief from heat, rain, traffic and shortages.

Volunteers were joined by troops called out by President Bush. Troops in cargo planes and helicopters carrying tents, clothing, water and ice reached the heavily damaged areas.

Health officials feared disease could arise from a lack of clean water and rotting food, and garbage covered by swarms of mosquitoes. Meanwhile disorganization continued to plague the massive and sometimes overzealous relief

"I'm hot; I'm tired," said Gwen Bullock, an official from hard-hit Florida City. "My wire is getting shorter and shorter.'

An Army Chinook helicopter also sat on the runway, waiting to be unloaded. The aircraft was loaded with bottled water, fruit juice, iced tea, and pallets of charcoal and lighter fluid.

"I'll follow anybody who's in charge. But we need somebody in charge right now," Coast Guard Lt. Cmdr. Mike Anderson said.

He complained that the various military, government and local authorities were operating on different radio frequencies.

'I can't even get hold of the front gate,"

Army Chief of Staff Gen. Gordon Sullivan arrived from Washington to tour the disaster zone with military supply and logistics commanders. He assured local officials in Homestead he would improve communications.

The first "tent cities" would begin to go up Sunday night, Sullivan said, adding that other supplies were coming.

Religious and political leaders tried to rally

We don't know how this is all going to be put back together again," the Rev. Matthew Cox said. "But God comes in a vision to say: 'Do not be afraid.

Gov. Lawton Chiles, the Rev. Jesse Jackson and Archbishop Edward McCarthy were among those who spoke to congregations. "Somebody said this area will never be the same," Chiles said. "I think that's right - it's going to be even better." Authorities said four disaster-aid field offices were open, and 11 more were set up Sunday. Some 160 miles of road had been cleared, and all primary roads were open. Banks and check-cashing services opened Sunday, and distribution of government checks began in the disaster area. Letter carriers made rare Sunday home deliveries in other parts of Dade County. More than two inches of rain fell on some of the ravaged areas Saturday, and thundershowers scattered across South Florida again Sunday. The heavy rains soaked donated clothes and food on the ground. As of midday Sunday, Florida City still hadn't received the promised Army tents to house up to 2,500 homeless. Workers finished bulldozing a campsite targeted for the tents. State authorities said complaints of illegal opportunism were diminishing Sunday. Five

KANSAS CITY CRIME RATE HIGH

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (AP) - Kansas City-area residents are more likely to be victims of violent crime than the national population crime statistics show.

There were 1,175 violent crimes per 100,000 residents in the 10-county metropolitan area in 1991, according to a FBI report released Saturday.

The national rate was 758 per 100,000. The area's overall crime rate, 7,479 crimes per 100,000 people, also was higher than the national average of 5,898.

The FBI compiles nationwide crime statistics each year from 16,000 law enforcement agencies.

SADDAM CONDEMNS FLIGHT BAN

BAGHDAD, Iraq (AP) -President Saddam Hussein vowed Sunday on Iraqi radio to resist the "no-fly" zone imposed over southern Iraq by U.S.-led allies, but offered no actions his government might take. It was his first statement about the ban, imposed Thursday to protect Shiite Muslim rebels from air attacks by Iraq's military. In the 50-minute statement, Saddam claimed the allies were plotting to partition the Arab world to seize control of its oil wealth. In Washington, White House spokesman Walter Kansteiner said the action was taken because Iraq violated a U.N. no-aggression resolution.

Fewer class sections canceled this fall

WADE RAMSEY

Collegian

Students returned last fall to discover many classes had been canceled due to University budget year's This enrollment adjustment helped lower the number of classes lost due to lack of money.

Fewer class sections were canceled this fall. In several areas, the number of class sections actually increased to meet the growing interests of students in the College of Arts and Sciences.

"There are actually more class sections of Expository Writing I than this time last year," said William Feyerharm, assistant dean of the College of Arts and Sciences, "The classes are a bit smaller, but we are instructing more students than in the past."

Expository Writing I, formally English Composition I, was an area hard-hit by budget cuts last fall, Feyerharm said.

This time last year, there were 118 English Composition I classes. This year, we have 127," said Dean Hall, head of the English department. "I don't know exactly where the money to avoid big cuts came from. All I know is that the dean's office found the money somewhere. We were able to add classes right and left."

The University avoided canceling classes by using much of its $1.69-million enrollment adjustment given by the Kansas Legislature.

According to Feyerharm, the largest share of the enrollment adjustment went to the College of Arts and Sciences to restore class sections cut in February.

'All in all, we tried to balance the deficit of the college against the required cuts. The provost provided us with some money, but we managed to avoid widespread cancellations," Feyerharm said.

Hall said this has been the best year for anticipating student numbers.

"The waiting lines for classes are nowhere near what the wait was last year," he said. "There are handfuls waiting this year. Last year, there were mobs.

Upper-level English courses are full, but the waiting lists are not as long, Hall said.

Feyerharm said some lectures were canceled, but the cancellations were due to staffing changes instead of budget cuts.

In colleges that canceled a class section, the remaining class sections were enlarged to absorb the students.

We did have to cancel some English classes, but it was because some of our staff went on sabbatical, vacation or other staffing reasons. Not because of budget cuts," Hall said.

The real problem this semester has not been budget cuts. Most of our cuts were planned in February," Feyerharm said. "The real problem has been a bottleneck of students in the College of Arts and Sciences."

According to Feyerharm, the number of students enrolling in courses offered by the college is increasing.

"The number of students leaving other colleges, especially business, engineering, architecture and human ecology; has created a bottleneck in our college. They are

Dream still not possible for everyone

Americans are still dispossessed from their land, and Hispanics have nothing," Jones said. "When you look at America, those who are colored, those who are poor, those who struggle daily to survive and work, find at the end of the week that they have nothing.

"The poor do get poorer, and the rich do get richer," Jones said. "And yet, I continue to say it's not hopeless.'

Jones said reparation must be made to those who have suffered.

"The year 1992, for those who are keeping count, is the 500th year in which some people are celebrating the coming of Columbus," Jones said. "Depending on which way you stand, this was either an invasion or a discovery. I've always thought of it personally as an invasion.'

The discovery of America started the race problems America now has, Jones said.

"It inaugurated the slave trade on these shores," Jones said. "It started the genocide of virtually millions of native peoples. It began a whole kind of aristocracy of power, in which poor white people were as devastated as anyone else, because they had no rights in this nation.

"We've got to think about repairing the damage that has been done to those who have been victimized by the system," Jones

The fact of the matter is, when you talk about America, you're not talking about the land of the free. You're not talking about this place that is pictured across the everybody else." Jones said the future relies on all Americans.

Because of the decrease in job availability, Akin said the center is looking for new employers many of which are smaller companies. The center brings in a variety of government agencies, along with other large employers.

Most on-campus interviews will start in late September and continue through November. Students can sign up for appointments beginning or after Sept. 8.

Another program set up by the placement center is an interview clinic, which not only helps students feel more relaxed in an interview situation, but helps the University to develop relations with new companies.

"What happens in the clinics is there is a real, live interviewer doing a real, live interview. After about 20-30 minutes of interviewing, the interviewer will describe to the candidate how they felt," Akin said.

Hurricane uncovers problems

THE ISSUE

Many of the problems in the aftermath of Hurricane Andrew could have been avoided with better planning and less bickering.

WE SUGGEST

Improved disaster relief planning and prediction could save money and lives.

In the aftermath of Hurricane Andrew and due to the terrific political bungling of a number of relief agencies and politicians southern Florida has been made to look more like a Third World country than the paradise it once

Now considered the worst natural disaster in the history of the United States, Andrew left billions of dollars in damage and thousands homeless in his wake of destruction.

It will be months before accurate figures are available, but conservative estimates already say the cleanup may cost between $15 and $20

Certainly, it's a disaster in any sense of the

But the greater disaster lies in the fact that red tape and ineptness on the part of both local and federal agencies have made the calamitystricken residents suffer much longer than necessary.

Tremendous traffic jams, chock-full telephone lines, lack of electricity and hesitancy on the part of the decision-making hubs have kept victims from obtaining simple things. Simple things such as food, potable water and dry

Reports of people being stranded in their homes for days are common.

More common than that are reports of plenty of supplies and help being available. But supplies are sitting, and people are standing around, waiting for instructions from leaders who are hopelessly lost.

It's a given that confusion will reign during any disaster of such epic proportions. But unlike an earthquake or tornado that strikes without warning, Andrew's course was tracked for days, and his landfall was accurately predicted nearly three days before he struck.

It doesn't take a rocket scientist to figure out what a hurricane packing 170-mph winds is going to do to civilization once it arrives.

Relief agencies should have been fully mobilized days before Andrew's arrival. While it was a powerful storm, it didn't act in an unusual manner.

If proper planning had been at the fore, people could have received aid the day after, if not sooner. And certainly not only now.

Even in Kansas, we know it's hurricane

When those in charge figure out that at least one strong storm is going to strike every year, then perhaps we can avoid another fiasco like that in the aftermath of Hurricane Andrew.

READERS WRITE

Letter misinterprets true message of Bible

Editor,

Mr. Hart's column on church and state ("Civil-liberties groups are the real censors") seems to have set off some fireworks.

Unfortunately, the only response printed was one against it. I have to wonder if this is because that is the only letter submitted, or if it is because that is a view of the

I was spurred to write after reading Mr. Marnell's letter responding to the column. I can no longer listen to lies about the Bible, Jesus Christ or faith. The Bible is the inspired word of God and a love letter to people of all races. It does not contain a single contradiction within itself or in reference to known history from other cultures. Nor does it condone sexism, racism, etc.

Recognizing something's existence does not mean it is condoned. I recognize the fact that rape exists, but I in no way condone it. How can Jesus' reply in Matthew 22:37 be justified without contradiction to the rest of the Bible if God condoned any of those acts?

I was enraged just as much as you, Mr. Marnell, when I read your letter and what it had to

However, I did not sin when I got angry at your words, but sinned when I got angry at you, as in Ephesians 4:26. My apologies to you, and I ask for your forgiveness. That is what the Bible condones, and I will keep you in my prayers.

Church and state are difficult to separate

Editor,

In response to John Hart's editorial on civil-liberties groups, I'm glad to know that you're against censorship and all, but your own bias toward other people's religious freedom is inexcusable.

You believe that Christianity is viewed by the average Joe as an evil beast that wouldn't be missed if driven off the face of the earth. Truth is, 95 percent of Americans believe in God. which I hope makes you rest

Therefore, even though there is a distinct separation between church and state, there will never be a removal of religion from the government.

I offer the current presidential race as an example, particularly the family values issue. Do you think that Clinton invented this issue one day for lack of something better to do? I think not. For the family value affair is made up of those vile Judeo-Christian values everyone is so warv of.

And on the subject of Judeo-Christian schools, why don't you think of them as nonreligious pressuring institutions? Let's imagine your children having to chant a Hare Krishna mantra before class or getting the Hanukkah holiday off. It makes it difficult to teach those Christian values, or Muslim, or Buddhist; in a situation like that, huh?

The public sector is for everyone, which means neutrality is a must, not a joke.

SOAP OPERA Chronicle suffers from lack of talent

Sue Parrman's Russian sqap opera, "One Day to Live," is total trash. Not only is it painfully stupid, but it is offensive as well.

I imagine the uproar that would ensue, and rightly so, if a similar piece of drivel appeared in the Collegian, perhaps featuring an "African Hillbilly" or a "Mexican Mountain Man."

Apparently, there are some ethnic groups it's still safe to ick on, and the Russians appear to be one of them.

Somebody needs to remind Ms. Parrman that the Cold War is over. Somebody also needs to tell her she's not funny.

Where life truly begins is major crux of abortion issue

In recent years, no other issue has been as emotionally charged as abortion. Unfortunately, abortion is difficult to discuss because its emotional volatility clouds logic. Most abortion debates focus on a woman's right to reproductive freedom. Yet the real issue is whether abortion is murder. If it is murder, then reproductive freedom would be rendered an irrelevant argument.

In 1988, Dick Kurtenbach from the American Civil Liberties Union mediated a flag-burning debate at my high school. The debate eventually gravitated to abortion. Many approval-seeking students approached the microphone and made their pro-choice statements to the cheers of the largely pro-choice crowd. As my frustration mounted, I began formulating questions in my mind. After much deliberation, I stood and posed the question "If a fetus is not a person, then what exactly is it?" to Mr. Kurtenbach.

In the spirit of Ross Perot, Kurtenbach responded evasively: "I'm not going to force my opinions on you, and you're not going to force your opinions on me!"

Then what precisely is a person? This is the core issue of the abortion debate. Prochoicers base their argument that abortion is not homicide on three premises. First, they claim life is a process, meaning there is no one "event" during which a fetus becomes a person. Instead, a fetus gradually becomes a person. This logic is useful for creating an elastic line of person vs. nonperson reasoning that can be stretched to fit the arbitrary whims of pro-choicers.

Second, pro-choicers describe the unborn as "potential persons" that must develop certain qualities before they can be called "actual persons." The two most basic qualities of actual persons, according to Joseph Fletcher, pro-choice ethicist, include a "minimum level of intelligence" and "individual or separate existence." Fletcher has decided for all of us that anyone below an IQ of 20 would not qualify as a person, and anyone below an

IQ of 40 would be a questionable person. Using this reasoning, would be acceptable for me to kill anyone who didn't possess a "minimum level of intelligence" due to severe mental retardation, senility or a coma.

This "individual separate existence" clause excludes the unborn from humanity because they are not existing separately from their mothers. A 6-month-old fetus could quite possibly live outside of the womb, yet it's classified as a nonperson. It's unreasonable to believe a fetus magically becomes a person once its umbilical cord is cut.

It's like saying an orange on a tree isn't an orange until it's picked. All living things are actual, thus zygotes are actual persons with potential.

Finally, pro-choice defendants claim although a fetus is alive in biological terms, it's not a person but a "mass of tissue." Yet biology tells us our mental and physical states affect one another. Human life is not confined to the physical body. Are the retarded and senile "masses of tissue" because they don't posses human qualities? Pro-choicers offer no explanation or reasoning as to when their alleged "mass of tissue" becomes a person.

Abortion is an intensely personal issue that doesn't offer any easy decisions. I understand that many other variables, such as poverty, affect a woman's decision about abortion. Yet in view of the core issue of "What is a person?" and the fact that life begins at conception, I believe abortion is wrong in all circumstances unless the mother's life is in danger.

While discussing this issue with my girlfriend, I was forced to deal with the question of how I would respond if she were impregnated by a rapist. I won't make any promises about how I'd react if I were to face such an agonizing experience. But taking the life of another person wouldn't rectify the situation.

I've found all pro-choice arguments are at best very vague, offering no definite reasons as to why abortion isn't murder. I wonder if their arguments are just excuses to justify selfish motives, with pro-choice logic being a guessing game where the losers are executed. When deciding whether to spare a life or take a life, uncertainty is unacceptable.

Varsity Theater to reopen Sept. 11

MATTHEW CUNNINGHAM

An Aggieville landmark is set to reopen after a six-year vacancy

Varsity Theater, located across from Brothers Tavern, is slated to rejoin the Aggieville business community Sept. 11. The theater closed in the summer of 1986 after trying to become a sub-run movie theater the last six or seven weeks of its existence.

"The closing came about because of the lack of first-run movies available," said Bob Howard, city manager for First International Theaters, which owns the Varsity.

At the time, there were 14 first-run screens in Manhattan. Seth Child Cinema and Westloop 6 Cinema received the top runs, and the Varsity got whatever else was available, Howard said.

Tom Woolery, regional manager of First International Theaters, said there were two reasons for reopening the Varsity.

"One, we own the property and pay taxes on it, and two, because of the big success of the Campus Theatre at the discount rate," he said. "And this is an opportunity to increase that."

Though it had been rumored the Varsity would become an art-film theater, it will be a subrun theater similar to the Campus Theatre, which is run by the same company. They will both run movies that have played at Seth Child and Westloop.

But before it's back in business, the Varsity will get a

The company is modernizing the theater by reworking the seating, as well as turning the aisle from stairs into a ramp, improving access for the handicapped.

The theater originally had seating for 334, but after remodeling, the number of seats will be reduced to between 225 and 275 to improve viewing.

The Tubes to take the stage tonight at Brothers Tavern

MARCIE FREDERIKSEN

The Tubes, famous for their 1980s hit "She's a Beauty," will return to the Manhattan stage with new music and greatest hits.

They can be seen tonight at 11 at Brothers Tavern.

The Tubes' legend is known to those familiar with rock or pop culture history.

They were notorious for their wild, state-of-the-art theater shows, which were banned in several major cities. The band took the opportunity to write a song about the incident, "Tubes World Tour."

The Tubes also gained popularity when they released songs such as "White Punks on Dope" and "Slipped my Disco."

Glenn Pendiay, senior in kinesiology, won the powerlifting portion of the Natural Strength Junior World Championship in weightlifting in August in Moscow.

Pendlay powerlifts in Moscow

"I wouldn't have kept him from going for anything. I had no idea where the money would come from, but I knew we'd get by."

JUANITA PENDLAY

For Wildcat Glenn Pendlay, it was truly a golden summer.

Pendlay, senior in kinesiology, traveled to Moscow to compete in the powerlifting portion of the Natural Strength Junior World Championship in weightlifting.

He returned home with the gold. "I couldn't have asked for much more," Pendlay said. "The competition was pretty tough, and I'm real happy with how I did." What exactly did the 275pounder from McPherson do?

Not only did he bench 402 pounds, dead lift 600 pounds and squat 651 pounds, but he also lasted the entire competition without missing a single lift. For just the second time in his career, he was a perfect nine-for-nine.

"That's something I'm proud of," said Pendlay, who, by his own estimation, has won all but three of the 14 competitions he has entered.

Included in Pendlay's list of victories is the collegiate nationals and state championships.

And Pendlay, who has been powerlifting for just more than a year, has even brought the sport he loves to Wildcat country.

Last year, he assembled a group of lifters and formed a K-State team. Eight members of the squad traveled to Dallas, at their own expense, to compete in collegiate nationals. Anchored by Pendlay, who won his portion of the competition, the team took surprising second.

Pendlay said the team might have taken the first-place trophy had more members of the team been able to afford the trip.

The journey to Moscow, which cost nearly $3,500, was also the responsibility of Pendlay.

Juanita Pendlay - who, along with her husband, Bill, footed the bill for her son - said the trip was undoubtedly worth it.

"There's no doubt about it," Juanita Pendlay said. "I wouldn't have kept him from going for anything. I had no idea where the money would come from, but I knew we'd get by.

"Something will just go unpaid this winter." she said.

Indeed, the trip was more than just a chance for Glenn Pendlay to lift weights - it was an educational experience.

"The cultural part of it was a shock, because it's so different there," Glenn Pendlay said. "Their standard of living is so low."

But Glenn Pendlay said that low standard of living - the green tap water at the hotel, the spoiled meat, the raw fish and the shredded newspaper used for toilet paper didn't stop him from having a

J. KYLE WYATT/Collegian

Pendlay, who had been lifting for a little more than a year when he went to Russia, trains a few times a week at the Rec Complex.

"The people there are probably the friendliest people you'll ever meet," he said. "They're extremely generous."

And Glenn Pendlay returned that generosity with a little kindness of his own.

He soon learned that weightlifting equipment in Moscow is extremely expensive and that most lifters can't afford even the smallest things. Glenn Pendlay had gone to Moscow with plenty of equipment, but he returned home with considerably

He gave away 15 weight suits, eight knee braces, six wrist braces and a number of belts.

"Glenn has always been so terribly, terribly giving," Juanita Pendlay said. "He's got the biggest heart in the world."

Juanita Pendlay, who claims to be Glenn's No. 1 fan, and wore a sweatshirt announcing it while he wrestled in high school, said the victor's phone call from Moscow is something she won't soon

"He was just like a euphoric child," she said. "He was so happy and so excited. I had a hard time listening to him without crying.

"It couldn't have happened to a nicer guy," she said.

Brett indeed a legend

In a season riddled with atrocious fielding, sporadic hitting and few reasons to look toward the future, ageless George Brett has, once again, given Kansas City Royals fans something to

In 1990, when the Royals were battling in the pits of the American League West, Georgie kept the fans watching by competing for the batting title. It was one of the tightest batting races in recent memory, and, as is his forte, he did not disappoint.

Brett laced a single to right field in his final atbat of the season, sealing his victory with a .329 average and becoming the only man in major league history to win a Silver Bat in three decades.

In 1980, with the Royals running away with the division title and Brett running away with the batting title, he again packed the stadium by trying to achieve something that hadn't been done since 1941 - bat .400.

And although Brett tapered off at the end of the season, finishing with a measly .390, he sneaked over the Ted Williams-esque plateau and thrilled Royals fans and all baseball fans across the country.

This season, a season in which visions of the division title faded quickly with a 1-16 start, George is at it again.

Only 16 men in major league history have collected 3,000 hits in their careers. Robin Yount of the Milwaukee Brewers is just 11 hits away from the milestone, and he will inevitably achieve that this season.

The illustrious No. 5 is looking to be No. 18.

Perhaps Brett's .276 average, which still ranks among the top of the Royals regulars, is proof of what has been said for years — as Brett goes, so go the Royals.

In that infamous 1980 season, Brett paved the for the first Royal World Ser He drove in a career-high 118 runs, despite playing in just 117 games, and was crowned the American League MVP.

In 1985, when the Royals won their only World Series, Brett had perhaps his greatest season ever. Not only did he put up the offensive numbers — .335, 30 home runs and 112 RBI but his defensive prowess earned him the Gold Glove.

Indeed, the man is a legend. Brett will most definitely secure his place in baseball folklore by collecting hit number 3,000 in the 1992 campaign. No doubt about it. The baseball era in Brett's life, as much as it pains me to say it, is coming to a close. Sure, he still has more than enough ability to play with the big boys. He can still smack a breaking ball low and away to the left center field gap with the best of 'em. But he's about to embark on another stage in his life: fatherhood. Sure enough, Kansas City's most famous bachelor, who recently married a local gal, is going to be a daddy.

That reason, and the fact that the Royals are trying to bring along new bats like that of Jeff Conine and Kevin Kosloski who need a place in the lineup, is enough to propel George into a late-

Yes, George will surely collect his 3,000 hits. No doubt about it.

The Royal slugger will thereby provide the icing on the cake of an illustrious career and secure his place in the Hall of Fame.

Ah, yes — the man is truly a legend.

KANSAS CITY — Hot one game, not so hot the next. That's Dave Krieg's history.

A steady, unbroken chain of continuing improvement, however, has been the history of the Kansas City Chiefs during this period fans are calling "the Peterheimer era."

Now that their destinies are interwoven and largely interdependent, one can't help but wonder whose history is about to undergo an abrupt change.

Will it be Krieg, who had an up-and-down 12 years with the Seattle Seahawks, in which he became the 10th-rated quarterback in NFL history, but season, they were 11-5 and never seemed to reach his full

Or will it be the Chiefs?

Since Carl Peterson became general manager and hired Marty Schottenheimer as coach, the one-time NFL sadsacks have become possible Super Bowl contenders, featuring a rough-and-tumble defense, a battering ram running game and a penchant for not making

Their last two seasons before Peterson and Schottenheimer arrived, the Chiefs won a total of eight games.

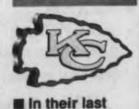

But in the first year of the new era, they went 8-7-1 for just their second winning season in nine years. The next made their second playoff appearance since 1971.

Then last year, they were 10-6 and posted their first playoff victory since Len Dawson, Buck Buchanan & Co., crunched Minnesota in the 1970 Super Bowl.

Given his talented surrounding cast and the momentum of two straight playoff appearances, the smart money might bet that 1992 will mark Dave Krieg's finest season.

"If you get to the Super Bowl, it's because your team performed well in all phases of the game, offense, defense and special teams," said Al Saunders, assistant head coach.

Skunks a menace recently in spread of rabies cases

The thought of rabies may bring back memories of Old Yeller's death.

This year, however, rabid skunks have been a more prevalent menace for spreading the contagious

A skunk was captured near Seaton Hall this month and taken to the Veterinary Medicine Complex where it was diagnosed as rabid, said K-State Police Chief Charles

Campus police use two methods to capture sick animals, aside from calling in professionals. Setting live, baited traps is one method. They also use nets and heavy bags to capture animals that are too sick to move

Kansas had 335 rabid animals reported this year. Of those, 302 were skunks. There were only 63 reported cases in 1991, said Dr. Deborah Briggs, assistant professor of veterinary diagnosis.

There are several warning signs in a skunk's behavior that may indicate it has rabies.

"A skunk with rabies would have central nervous system disorder. It would appear disoriented. It would be circling, falling-down sick, and it might be aggressive," Briggs said.

Skunks are nocturnal animals, so to even see one during the day is cause for suspicion.

For rabies to be transmitted, the skin must be broken, and saliva from the infected animal must be transferred.

Anyone who has been bitten by what may be a rabid skunk should rabid. If the animal is not captured, five post-exposure shots must be given.

This is not necessary if a person has been sprayed by a skunk.

Dogs and cats should receive their first vaccination against rabies at three months, Briggs said. Once pets become exposed to rabies, they are either quarantined, redepending on whether they have already been vaccinated.

Most people, on the other hand, have such a small risk of contracting rabies that they are not given pre-exposure vaccinations, said Charles Murphy, director of the Riley County Health Department.

Briggs, who has studied rabies in skunks since 1969, said he found tremendous increase in the number of rabid skunks.

'We always see a peak in the springtime, because skunks are out and active then," Briggs said.

Although it is not known why the disease becomes more widespread in such periodic cycles, the weather may have contributed to this most recent increase.

severe winter didn't kill them off," Briggs said. "The more skunks there are in the environment, the more chance there is that they'll become rabid. Skunks, raccoons, foxes, bobcats and coyotes are the main rabies carriers, Murphy said. These animals have a high resistance to the disease, and they can live with it

The best way to deal with these animals is to avoid them, Beckom

"I encourage people who see animals acting out of their norm to report it to the police and stay away," Beckom said. "There's no way of determining what the problem is, and it's not worth the

Dread Zeppelin better than ever with new frontman

J. KYLE WYATT/Collegian

Dread Zeppelin guitarist Tuna Melt takes a break to pose for a picture with Angie Fenstermacher, senior In journalism and mass communications, Saturday night during the Welcome Back Concert.

Headliner Dread Zeppelin ruled the Welcome Back Concert Saturday afternoon with Led Zeppelin covers, reggae beats and disco fusion.

Truck Stop Love opened the concert at Memorial Stadium, followed by Roach Factory and the L.A. Ramblers.

Dread Zeppelin was worth every penny and more of the $4 admission. Many of the songs in Dread Zeppelin's set were impressive, and the band had no trouble completely overshadowing the opening bands in charisma, costuming, stage presence, originality and musical quality.

The original concept of Dread Zeppelin was to cover Led Zeppelin and Elvis Presley songs to a reggae beat. This worked well for the band's first release, "Un-Led-Ed."

Unfortunately, the groups' lead singer and Elvis impersonator, Tortelvis, left the band and was replaced by his friend and former Dread bassist Gary B.I.B.B. (Bastard Impersonating Butt Boy).

Any doubts about Gary's ability to fill Tortelvis' shoes were dispelled when the band took the

The band's garb effectively describes the performance: an eccentric, diverse hybrid of themes.

Gary, toting a cane and a sporting grayish bouffant, came on stage dressed in a gold lamé coat-and-pants ensemble. Guitarist Tuna Melt, whom Gary introduced as coming "straight off of the Donny Osmond revival tour," was dressed only in biker shorts. The lead guitarist wore a gingham-checked, shin-length outfit from the Turtles' "Happy Together" video. Dread's set included a cover of "Living Loving Mad" off the band's first album and a rendition of "Stairway to Heaven" from the second album. Two new numbers were "The Gary B.I.B.B. Theme Song" and a slowed-down cover of Guns N' Roses' "Welcome to the Jungle," complete with Gary sweetly cooing "I'm gonna make you bleed.'

The highlight of the show was the Village People's "YMCA." Dread Zeppelin ended its gig with the fast-paced "Disco Inferno."

Roach Factory's performance was adequate. The band definitely has a different sound from Dread Zeppelin, but it performed the role of opening band to the letter.

The L.A. Ramblers were also adequate with a sound somewhat difficult to pin to a certain genre.

But most - if not all - of what the first three bands accomplished was completely outdone by Dread

'Northern Exposure' named best drama

ASSOCIATED PRESS

PASADENA, Calif. - CBS' "Northern Exposure" was named best drama series Sunday, giving the eclectic drama six Emmys at the 44th annual TV awards.

Dana Delany won best dramatic actress for her role as a combat nurse in ABC's now-canceled 'China Beach," which has not been seen on network television for more than a year.

And the best dramatic actor award went to Christopher Lloyd of the Disney Channel's "Avonlea."

'Northern Exposure" Valerie Mahaffey won for her supporting role as the hypochondriac Eve, while writers Andrew Schneider and Diane Frolov were honored for the script "Seoul Mates" in the drama about life in Alaska.

The series also won three technical Emmys Saturday.

The production team of Joshua Brand and John Falsey earned a writing Emmy for the pilot of NBC's "I'll Fly Away."

The two also produce "Northern Exposure" and together earned 31

"Day 4 - Whew, is this a man or what?"

The door slowly creaks open, and quite an impressive sight is standing there. Delilah moistens her lips and sighs heavily as her eyes slither up the beastoid in front of her, starting with his legs. Patchy, braided hair on the legs ... zebra-striped bikini briefs ... a faded Village People concert-tour shirt ... and facial features that prove that people actually do play goalie in hockey without a mask. At 5 feet 10 inches and roughly 277 kilos (about 610 pounds), this manly man reeks of pure power and persuasion, and his name just happens to be Wolfgang. His odor is bellowing forth ever so gently, letting all within three square miles know of his hazardous occupation as a roadkill trapper.

Wolfgang and Delilah have been dating off and on for the past four years, and now he announces he has a surprise.

"Gosh no, not another 12-pack of Falstaffs," moans Delilah as she holds both of her skinned-up knees, remembering what happened the last time she drank a 12-pack of Falstaffs.

"Ho ho ho no!" shouts Wolfgang triumphantly. "No more Greco-Roman wrestling. You keep cheating by rolling me onto my back. I just want you to meet my new friend."

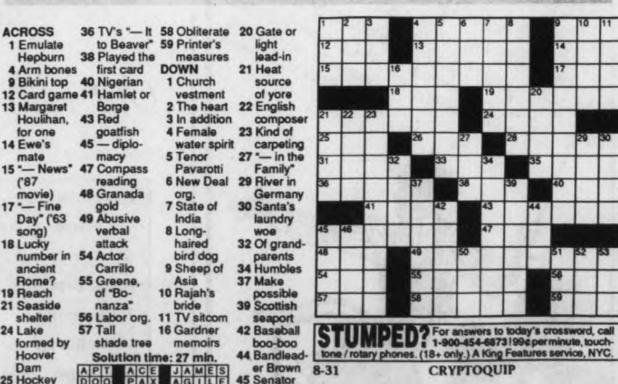

While listening to the beauty and the beast's conversation, and staring at the rotund person squeezing through the door, Sputnik suddenly gets the urge to go bowling. But that's another episode.

Not only does Wolfgang walk in, but someone else is right behind him. The other person can't be seen because of Wolfgang's Adonis-like frame.

Just who is this person Wolfgang brought over? What are Wolfgang's intentions? How did he track down Delilah? How the hell did he fit through the door? For answers, you know where to look - tomorrow's Collegian.

Brazilian legislature may oust president

BRASILIA, Brazil - The pace of government defections quickened and markets slumped Monday in a rebuke to President Fernando Collor de Mello.

Sunday he announced he would not resign. The government's leader in the Senate, Marco Maciel, quit Monday. Leaders of the Liberal Front Party, Collor's main backers in the 503-seat Chamber of Deputies, said they would not oppose impeachment, which appears inevitable.

An unofficial count showed 339 legislators favor impeachment three more than the two-thirds needed.

Collor, who in 1989 won Brazil's first free presidential election since 1960, is accused of receiving millions of dollars from a slush fund run by his former campaign treasurer, Paulo Cesar Farias.

The Sao Paulo stock exchange was down 6.2 percent in reaction to Collor's televised speech Sunday night, in which he denied charges of corruption and claimed to be a victim of persecution. Other reaction was overwhelmingly negative.

"It was superficial and insufficient," said Sen. Mauricio Correa of the Democratic Labor Party a government ally until last week. "He didn't explain where the money came from. Resignation is the only way out."

Jair Meneguelli, president of the leftist Central Workers Union, Brazil's largest labor group, said he was glad Collor refused to resign.

"We want to remove him through impeachment, so he loses his political rights, has his assets frozen and is tried like a common thief," Meneguelli said.

Collor's chief of staff, Jorge Bornhausen, negotiated an offer of a pardon and congressional support for five bills, including tax reform and port modernization, in return for Collor's resignation by Sept. 30.

But presidential press spokesman Etevaldo Dias said Collor considered the proposal unacceptable. "You don't set a date for the president's resignation. That would amount to a coup," Dias said.

Lottery lucky for all

MEGAN MULLIKIN

All of the 2,800 students who tried for Garth Brooks concert tickets at Bramlage Coliseum Monday night got lucky At 5:30 p.m., they began coming through the doors. Each student with a current fee receipt got a lottery ticket with a number. Then, the waiting began.

Every student received a chance for two tickets, Bramlage director Charlie Thomas said. In the end, everyone's number was called.

Thomas said Bramlage officials created the lottery to accommodate the students. There had been problems with long lines to get tickets in other cities, he said, and this was one way to prevent problems.

'We got exactly what we were after. We took care of our students with few complaints," Thomas said.

Suzy Ridder, senior in education, said she hoped she would get tickets and didn't care if she had to wait all night.

Lafene switches insurance companies

MEGAN MULLIKIN

Lafene Student Health Center has changed insurance companies, at possibly a lower cost to students.

For three years, the University health plan has been offered by Blue Cross/Blue Shield. This year, the student health committee of seven students and two faculty members chose Monumental Life Insurance Company because of the cost of the premiums.

The claims for the plan are companies provided, and the costs handled by G-M Underwriters. Blue Cross/Blue Shield's yearly costs for a student were $719.16, and this year their bid increased to $1,258. Underwriters' annual premium for a single student is Because the insurance is a group plan, it provides considerable student discounts, Lafene director Lannie Zweimiller said.

"We looked at what the and benefits seemed to fit best and cover the students the best," Zweimiller said.

The new policy offers 100percent coverage at Lafene. If the student does not use Lafene because the service is unavailable, there is a $100 deductible in which the company pays 80 percent, and the subscriber pays 20-percent, up to attorney for student legal services, both said there aren't too many changes from last year's coverage. Several insurance companies submitted a bid, and the student committee and Student Senate chose the company.

The policy has a $25 extra deductible to subscribers who choose not to use available services at Lafene.

It also provides for spouses and ■ See INSURANCE page 9

ASSOCIATED PRESS

MOSCOW - Hundreds of Tajikistan's opposition members surrounded the presidential palace Monday, took senior government officials hostage and demanded the resignation of President Rakhmon Nabiyev, news reports said.

The opposition has criticized Nabiyev, a former Communist Party leader, for failing/to stop a bloody tribal conflict that rages in two areas of the central Asian republic. They also accuse him of failing to move quickly enough on democratic reforms.

In other unrest in the former Soviet Union, fighters ignored a cease-fire agreement in the secessionist Abkhazia area of Georgia, and a prospective truce also appeared threatened by new Armenian-Azerbaijani violence that reportedly killed scores of people in Nagomo-Karabakh.

More than 100 courses offer free tutoring through campus-sponsored programs at K-State.

Students may request tutoring for as many as three hours in up to three subjects a week.

"If students feel like they're not comprehending the subject matter in depth or are beginning to feel lost in a class, then they should seriously look at getting a tutor," said Charlotte Olsen, acting director director of Student Support Services. "We encourage them to look prior to failures on several

Applications are accepted from 8 a.m. to 5 p.m. at the tutoring center in Leisure 201. Applicants are screened for background information before they are placed in the program.

"Basic things like address, phone number, any learning disabilities, if their parents received a degree and if they are receiving financial aid," said Darren Oxford, graduate assistant and tutoring center coordinator.

"We have them fill out a schedule. A lot of students are looking to schedule tutoring at some perfect time, but the more time someone leaves open on their schedule, the better chance they have of getting tutoring," Oxford said.

Applicants are divided into two categories. Those with limited educational and economic backgrounds are placed into a program funded by the U.S. Department of Education. The others are placed in a program supported by the Student Governing center is processing approximately 100 applications for tutors.

"We set up the time and the place and make arrangements with the tutor. It is our expectation that the student will come to each session," Olsen said.

Tutoring will be available until shortly before finals.

Campus tutoring covers a wide variety of subjects. Olsen said that in upper-level or specialized courses, a student may need to consult a private tutor for help.

"Our services are geared to lower-level courses to allow students to get their feet on the ground," Olsen said. "College Algebra is one of the big ones."

Olsen said other heavily tutored classes include intermediate algebra and lower-level physics classes.

Private tutors charge fees, but cost often is negotiable.

Chetan Shah, graduate student in engineering and private tutor, said he will charge students differently for assistance.

"I don't have a set amount I charge," Shah said. "This is my first time tutoring, and what I charge will depend on the subject." Higher fees are charged for advanced level courses, or when intense help is needed by a student.

Tutoring groups coordinated by the college usually consist of three to five people. Olsen said this small-group structure benefits the students because it allows them to work with each other.

"We encourage students to use each other in a cooperative-learning situation," Olsen said.

No additional tutors are needed for the program at this time.

A list of private tutors is kept at Educational Supportive Services in Holton Hall and also at U-LearN.

Three K-State professors will forge a link between Big Eight universities and central European faculty at a conference on environmental problems this week in Budapest, Hungary.

"We're hoping to bring together K-State and other Big Eight faculty to collaborate with central European faculty and other individuals involved in environmental problems," said Rick Forsyth, professor of landscape architecture and Center for Planning and Design Innovation director.

Forsyth, Dennis Law, head of the Department of Landscape Architecture, and Lorn Clement, associate professor of landscape architecture, will be the only Americans speaking at the parliament, representatives of the Hungarian Ministry for the Environment, delegates from other countries, citizens' groups and Hungarian planning groups are expected to attend.

The conference was the result of a forum on central European environment that the College of Architecture and Design sponsored last spring.

Law said one of the speakers at that forum was from Hungary, and he later convinced officials in his Members of the Hungarian country that an environmental workshop was needed in Hungary. Hungary has recently shifted from a centrally planned system to one in which more input from nongovernment agencies will be will be expected to assume more responsibility for environmental planning in the future. "While they have design skills, they know very little about marketing and how to set up a business," Law said. "So, we try to avail ourselves to them.'

The three educators will speak about environmental problems. Law said he will explain how allowed. Non-government agencies Hungarians can make laws to counteract economic forces that interfere with environmental conservation.

Clement said he will discuss ways of including non-government agencies in decisions about the environment, and he will suggest the U.S. National Environmental Policy Act as a framework.

Forsyth said he will explain ways to seek cooperation between public and private U.S. funding agencies and central European agencies and faculty.

WORK SMARTER. NOT HARDER.

ngineering student? Smart. Math or science major? Also smart. On tests, you probably run equations over again to make sure they're right. So you're working harder.

You don't have to do that anymore. Not when you use the TI-68 Advanced Scientific or TI-85 Graphics Calculator, with their last equation replay feature - and many other smart functions.

We've spent years with students like you and educators like your professors to develop the TI-68 and the TI-85. That's why they're so highly recommended.

For engineering students, the TI-68 solves up to five simultaneous equations, has complex number functions and offers formula programming.

The TI-85 builds on the power of the TI-68 by adding a wide range of graphing capabilities. Math students can handle calculus problems more easily. And technical students can see the functions for a better complex numbers. Matrices. Vectors. Lists. Strings. Plus, it offers a powerful one-equation SOLVER.

Try a TI-68 or TI-85 at your local TI retailer today. And start working smarter. Instead of harder.

KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

IN OUR OPINION

By the Collegian Editorial Board

We all need to face the music

THE ISSUE

Lack of student support, poor judgment and strict alcohol restrictions have caused a decline in attendance for music acts in Manhattan.

WE SUGGEST

Increased support, later starting times and less strict alcohol policies would increase enthusiasm for both local and non-local music acts.

Enthusiasm for music acts, local and nonlocal, has rapidly declined in Manhattan in the last three years.

Last year's Welcome Back Concert headliner Billy Squire didn't even draw enough spectators for the sponsor to break even. It looked more like a funeral for an unpopular politician than a rock 'n' roll intro to the new school year.

This year, the same happened to the Romantics, who played to a largely empty Aggieville for AggieFest '92.

Dread Zeppelin filled Memorial Stadium with only about 625 onlookers for this year's Welcome Back Concert.

Once again, the sponsors took a financial hit on the entire affair.

There are a number of reasons why these concerts failed to draw substantial numbers.

Strict rules against alcohol is perhaps one main reason. Block parties along Laramie and Vattier streets this year drew bigger crowds than the musicians did, namely because they were allowed to consume something stronger than soda

Time is also another factor.

Open air concerts must start later in the evening, or the fans become victims to the elements. Sandstone Theatre near Kansas City rarely begins an act until the sun is nearly down.

Needless to say, Sandstone's attendance is K-State can have successful concerts if the support of the students is there. When Pearl Jam performed in Lawrence last May, thousands showed up.

If back-to-school concerts are to be triumphant, sponsors must bring in acts that didn't reach their peaks in the mid-1970s.

And if these more contemporary acts are found, they need to be scheduled to start their sets later in the day, avoiding the probability of people passing out from heat stroke.

We are all to blame. There has been a lack of student support, a lack of money and a lack of good judgment by organizers.

The concept of the Welcome Back Concert and its purpose should be re-evaluated.

When problems are addressed instead of perpetuated, then perhaps student enthusiasm for these concerts will revive.

But until then, count on sliding attendance figures.

Pitfalls await the loyal believers

"Those disgruntled with Christianity ... discredit and mock the belief system based upon the resurrected Messiah."

tread on dangerous ground. The land you have entered is bereft of love for what you hold dear. This contentious region is not only a fortress of skepticism, but a stronghold of hostility, harboring all that would not merely question your faith, but destroy it.

Our beloved K-State has become a testing ground for all who would pick up their cross and follow Jesus. Faith, particularly that of Christians, has become an object of scorn and ridicule for many members of the University community. Those disgruntled with Christianity have taken every opportunity to discredit and mock the belief system based upon the resurrected Messiah.

Now, perhaps more than ever before, Christian, you will need to clutch fast to your cross, with great tenacity and fortitude. That is, of course, assuming your faith is one of personal certainty. The time has come to see to whom your faith belongs. Within this threatening environment, confidence will either stand or fall. Here is where you will discover whether or not your faith belongs to you personally, or if the title strange land. The challenges you face here will be unlike any ever encountered in Sunday school, choir practice, church camp, or the Boy Scouts. Either you will reach a height of spiritual maturity never dreamed, or you will become overwhelmed to the point you throw down your cross to follow after the whimsical currents of the popular any way, publicly affiliate with your Lord and openly adhere to his teachings. If you do as said above, you automatically run in conflict to the majority of current "moral thinking" at large on campus. You may very well be hated for your identification with Christ. What are you to make of all this negativity and hatred? Recall the words of Jesus himself, "If the world hates you, keep in mind that it Christian. In this line of hated me first. If you would love you as its own. As it is, you do not belong to the world, but I have chosen now if you will, you out of the world. That is warning why the world hates you"(John 15:18). It should go without saying, "No servant is greater than his Here in this dangerous and hostile land you will be tested, Christian. Your faith will either stand or it will fall. Much of the possible outcomes rely on the level of "ownership" - on what level your faith belongs to you. Either your faith is your own or it is a projection of what others believe. Are you a Christian because it is the nice or moral thing to do? Or are you Christian because you are 100-percent convinced of the work on the Albeit foolish to the world, the cross is your salvation. And if it yours, then your faith can survive and flourish. However, if Christianity is nothing more than dressing up for church on Sundays and attending important holiday services for the sake of your parents' expectations, or to be an upstanding citizen, your religion is fake and hollow. If you are of the latter, expect defeat, as you already walk

STUDENTS

Christian groups produce fine people

Editor,

I am writing to express views and facts concerning our young people, especially of Manhattan schools and K-State.

Every day, one can read of arrests of juveniles and even students for thefts, alcoholrelated crimes, rapes, etc. But do we ever read of anything good done by any of our young folks? No, never!

I am a man in my middle 80s and have been involved with young people since 1983. Longer than that, I've been involved with various Christian organizations headed by young people who spend their time not on the streets looking for trouble, but instead striving to make something of themselves. They attend classes regularly and use their free time studying or attending meetings that help build their character.

Having been a K-State student in the early 1980s, I began attending a Christian organization called ICTHUS. This is the Greek word for fish, which is used as a Christian symbol. This and other campus Christian organizations conduct regular meetings for fellowship and Christian songs. Prayer, as well as Bible reading, is a part, and guest speakers and related activities make up the meetings. Car pools are formed on Sundays to transport students who wish to attend church. Trips to Christian camps are attended by many.

I wish to say that I have met and made friends with many of the finest Christian young people possible.

I believe in these young people 100 percent, and my heart bleeds for those who have not become acquainted with and accepted Jesus Christ, who loves everyone and wants them to be good, useful citizens.

These meetings are at 8 p.m. on Thursdays in the Union Little Theatre. The theater last Thursday was packed.

POLITICS

Radical ideas are subverting country

Editor,

There seems to be an overwhelming misunderstanding among the staff of the Collegian that Republicans are the reason for this country's problems. They could be no more wrong.

The leftist radicals on the Collegian staff are trying to have us believe that the problems with this country are caused by Christian morals, marital fidelity, respect for our own bodies and financial planning for the future. The truth is that the real problems are just the opposite.

Unfortunately, true

conservative values are not being reinforced in the Collegian but are being ridiculed and thought of as wrong among the editorial staff. Maybe they need to take a closer look at their own morals and realize that they are leading a cause not of improving the country, as they think, but are rapidly destroying its values.

It is time that the liberals on the Collegian wake up and realize that their movement is destroying our country, not helping it. The majority of the students at K-State disagree on liberal views of abortion on demand, high taxation, gay and lesbian lifestyles, and other liberal propaganda that this newspaper prints daily.

Dan Quayle hit the nail on the head when he spoke of family values. Now even the moderate Democrats are picking up on it. Why don't you start printing material that the majority of the students want to read, not this far-left garbage that you want us to believe?

FEE PAYMENT

Enrollment process needs serious rework

Once again, we have all had to go through the dreaded process called fee payment. It is absolutely ridiculous to require each and every student to individually walk through this maze to pay their fees. Three full days are wasted while K-State attempts to account for all the students' fees. It is long past the time that this system be changed.

How could this be done? By using the mail. Many schools, including the University of Kansas, already allow students to send in their fees by mail and have found it to be successful. Just think of all the money that could be saved by not hiring those extra people for fee payment. Another improvement to the system would be to have the financial aid office communicate with the controller's office so that those students with grants and loans could still take care of their fees through the mail. Currently, many students with grants stand in line simply to sign their checks over to K-State. A little ridiculous, huh? No, this is K-State. Forcing students to go through fee payment semester-aftersemester isn't right. K-State should move quickly to catch up with the rest of the nation and allow fee payment through the mail. Not only would the students benefit, but so would the other individuals involved with this current mess.

Conservative changes may not be for the common good

The possibility of George Bush few similarities to the tight-knit getting axed has some political theorists claiming American conservatism is dying.

The End of Conservatism" (The New Republic, Aug. 31) by John J. Judis suggests the delusional but well-choreographed movement of the Reagan '80s is finished--it ran into '90s reality.

Uncharacteristic chaos in the Republican Party has hopeful leftists, like Judis, crowing that the end is near for the "coherent movement" of conservatism, which was built in the mid-1950s by the likes of Barry Goldwater and William F. Buckley Jr. Judis, and undoubtedly others sensing a Bush defeat, are predicting a return to the immediate post-World War II period - where conservatives bore were a disjointed tapestry of malcontents, ranging from relatively mainstream Ivy League Republicans to ultra-Right anti-Semites and racists worried about the subversion of the white race. Thankfully, there was little unification among their ranks.

So what happens if Judis is right? What happens if Bush doesn't get a second term? Incidentally, I won't believe it until I see Clinton take the oath of office in January. To suggest that an entire political movement, one that has dominated the second half of the 20th century, could utterly fall apart on the basis of one failed leader would be rather presumptuous Remember, these people survived Spiro and Tricky History has taught that it would be foolish to assume conservatism, a philosophy held by a majority of Americans, could dissipate overnight and be replaced with a new tolerance and understanding for liberal thinking. Any prediction like that is analogous to rosy first-glance notions that a collapsing Soviet Union surely precluded an immediate New World Golden Age. But there may be some truth to MARK ENGLER philosophy. However, those changes may not all be positive moves toward freer and more just-democracy.

Revolutionaries Reactionaries preach to empty auditoriums when a society experiences success

By the same those token. disorganized racist, paranoid, and antidemocratic ideas floating around in the late '40s and early '50s had a pretty heavy lid on top of them. Though experiencing the suggestion that a Bush defeat rising fears regarding Communism, would bring change in the Americans were enjoying an economic dominance of the world unprecedented by any power in

The victories of the war were paying off in magnificent dividends. Few Americans embraced Reactionary rhetoric they were too busy being successful.

The same is certainly not true

This country is now plagued by educational, social, and economic decay. There is no longer a sense that the fruit of tomorrow is as limitless as the imagination of

In this age, Americans more often fear a layoff than expect a raise from their employers definitely a far cry from the postwar feeling of omnipotence.

What is more, today's disenchanted Americans, especially hard-core conservatives, often exhibit xenophobic tendencies and seek refuge in the logic of racists and hayseed religious leaders (Bill Buckley phraseology, not mine) to attach fathomable reason to their disappointments.

So the question is not whether mainstream America will move Left in the event of a Bush defeat. Unless there is some unification of Liberal causes, it will not.

The real question will be whether it will hold a central course in the face of Right-wing demagogues who, in the spirit of preserving America's traditional ethnic and moral fiber, will likely tumble out of the woodwork if Clinton wins.

University schedules series of lectures for this year

BY THE COLLEGIAN STAFF

Four Convocation Lectures and three Landon Lectures have been scheduled for this year.

The Convocation and Landon lecture series are designed to provide different topics of interest for students.

"I think a university education should be a time for students to look into a wide variety of aspects of life," said Eugene Kremer, professor of architecture.

Convocation Lecture Series speakers are chosen by a committee of students, faculty and area

One speaker each is chosen to represent the four areas of interest: arts and humanity, public policy, human rights, and science and technology.

The group has to consider other University activities when choosing a date, as well as the funds

Kremer said the provost allocates $18,000, providing for travel expenses, boarding and publicity material.

The Convocation Lecture Series begins Oct. 7 with Harm J. de Blij, a South African geographer. De Blij was ABC News' geography consultant during coverage of the Persian Gulf War.

Carl Wunsch, scientist from MIT's Department of Earth, will speak Oct. 27 about the ocean's shifting currents and changing Sound choreography will be Joan Tower's topic April 23. Tower is composer and head of the music department at Bard College, New

The fourth Convocation Lecture has not been confirmed, but it is scheduled during Martin Luther King Jr. week.

Landon Lectures honor the memory of former Kansas Gov. Alf Landon. Ninety-one lectures have been since the the first in 1966.

Lamar Alexander, U.S. secretary of education since 1991, will open the series Oct. 7.

National Endowment for the Humanities director Lynne Cheney will speak Oct. 30.

CNN's Bernard Shaw will offer

The births are the first for the red panda at Sunset and in Kansas. Sunset is the only Kansas zoo that has red pandas, Baier said.

Sunset will also soon be the only place in Kansas to find cheetahs. A ground-breaking ceremony on Labor Day will open the cheetah exhibit, which will be completed in the fall, Baier said.

Mike Quick, general curator, said the cheetahs were acquired for the zoo through membership in the Species Survival Plan.

"SSP manages cheetahs as a whole population. Our two males will actually be the property of all zoos in the United States," Quick Sunset will act as a holding facility for two male cheetahs that were born in Columbus, Ohio, Quick said.

"Zoos are running out of room, so we really need to save the habitat of these animals," Baier said.

Baier credits the zoo's expansion to the $2 gate fee that was implemented in July 1989 and to the growth in public support.

She said attendance is up and predicts that last year's number of 52,000 visitors will be matched by the end of August this year.

"Many people who hadn't seen the zoo for several years came out to see the white alligator, and saw all the changes and became interested in the whole zoo," Baier said. "It's a great place for a first

Baier was also quick to point out that more than 70 percent of Sunset's visitors were from out of

Paintball was a good time

Here are some thoughts and feelings on my first experience of paintball, a game in which you work with a team to eliminate the opposing side with pump and semi-automatic paint guns.

Feeling No. 1: "Come on, you wiener!" This comes from my mouth as I try to avoid extinction. I'm ready to cuss him, but I don't want to draw attention to where I am.

He had eliminated three people on my team before he found me. He shot at me and missed. Now, I'm upset.

I was trying to flush, him out after he had followed me from forest to pasture land.

He didn't know I had two members on my team in some shrubbery.

For a little bit, I wasn't sure if it was him or not. He didn't identify himself as being on my team.

I shoot, and he shoots; we both miss. Out come my mates' semiautomatics to rock his world.

I get hit in this game. call myself out, although the ball doesn't leave its mark on my Feeling No. 2: "This is just a game, dude."

ANDERSON

Years of football, basketball, baseball, swimming and golf didn't prepare me for paintball.

It's sort of like playing tag, but you crawl around to avoid being "touched.

I had my pump gun and 100 balls. Two teams were set up with 12 or so men. The only markings identifying the teams were red and blue

Once Krazy Kris sounded off the horn, and the armies rammed into one another, I don't know why, but one guy just kept running while his semi-automatic shot toward anything that moved. He got one man before he was pelted.

I should have gotten a hunting license in my younger days. At least I would know how to hit something on the move as I lay in this ditch.

I should have gotten my license from Jack Lacey, the former secretary of the Kansas Wildlife and Parks Commission, who handed them out like they were going out of style.

One ball grazed my shoulder blade, and I called myself out. The ball didn't leave a mark, but one ball hit the team's youngster on the face mask, leaving orange paint around his mouth and

He was a little stunned.

Eventually, he got cleaned off to get eliminated a couple more times in the day. Instead of eating lead, he swallowed paint.

Feeling No. 3: "Wow, what a sport."

▶ FORMER WILDCATS CUT

The final cuts of the National Football League were made Monday, and only two of the five former Wildcats involved survived.

Russ Campbell of the Pittsburgh Steelers was kept as a part of the final 47. Rogerick Green, drafted by the Tampa Bay Buccaneers, also made the squad even though he had limited playing time in the preseason. He dislocated his elbow in the first game and is out indefinitely.

Elijah Alexander, who also tried out with the Bucs, was one of the final 13 players released

Michael Smith, who was not drafted but tried out as a free agent, was cut by the Kansas City Chiefs last week.

William Price was cut last Tuesday when squads were reduced to 60.

▶ATHLETICS TRADE CANSECO ▶ RIGGINS NOT GUILTY OF DUI

OAKLAND, Calif. (AP) - The Oakland Athletics, in a shocking move Monday night, traded slugger Jose Canseco to the Texas Rangers for outfielder Ruben Sierra, pitcher Bobby Witt, reliever Jeff Russell and cash.

Canseco, a two-time American League homerun champion, was hitting .246 this season with 22 homers and 72 RBIs.

Canseco, 28, played right field in the top of the first inning against the Baltimore Orioles and was in the on-deck circle in the bottom of the inning when he was called back by manager Tony La Russa and was told of the trade.

He then cleaned out his locker at the Oakland Coliseum and sat in the locker room for several minutes in stunned disbelief.

ARLINGTON, Va. (AP) - Hall of Fame running back John Riggins was cleared on Monday of a charge of driving under the influence of alcohol.

Arlington General District Court Eleanor Dobson ruled that Riggins' driving was not bad enough for him to be stopped along Interstate 66 early on the morning on May 5.

Riggins, who lives in Chantilly, Va., was able to say the alphabet and count backwards during a field sobriety test, according to testimony at a motions hearing. A state trooper testified that Riggins' vehicle was going 10 miles-an-hour slower than the speed limit and his car had touched the white line several times.

Riggins, the sixth all-time rusher in NFL history with 11,352 yards, was drafted by the New York Jets out of Kansas in 1971.

It's been the same game for the last few seasons. At the beginning of the K-State football team's fall camp, the question of who will throw the first pass of the season agains? Montana Sept. 19 was still open. And none of the actors involved in the opening act know for sure who will be the hero in the last act of the play. "Right now, both Jason and Matt are our No. 1 quarterbacks going in the fall camp," said Del Miller, assistant coach and the quarterback offensive coordinator. "We'll wait for the fall camp and see who is surfacing as No. 1. But up to now we have no indication. Coach Bill Snyder said he also is looking on a dead-tied race, hoping one of the two candidates will step up another level to claim the starting position. "I'd like to solve the situation as soon as possible," he said. "If it takes five days, it takes five days. If two weeks, then two weeks. If two

"We're friends," said Garber, a senior. "It's not that I wait for him to make a mistake or he waits for me to make a mistake. I want to be No. 1, but I'm also confident both of us can do the job.

"We're real buddies. He helps me out. I help him out," said Smargiasso, who last year, as a sophomore, was quarterback No. 2 behind Watson.

"With the snap of the helmet on the field, it's all competition. Competition breeds better athletes, but as soon as we are off the field we're friends," Smargiasso said. The advantage of having two players competing for so long is that both players lift each other in their performances. Spring practice was the best proof.

"I'm really pleased with the progress that they did. Both had a good summer," Snyder said.

Miller said, "Both young guys did a big step forward in spring game. Both are on a higher level, and I have confidence in both to start."

Smargiasso, who appeared in seven games last year and completed 12 of 34 passes for 163 yards, has advantages in his athletic abilities with his strong arm and speed. Smargiasso said one of his advantages is having experienced the same situation last year.

K-State's Huck Boyd Institute serves Kansas and responds to its needs.

The institute, founded in April 1990, is an extension of the Huck Boyd Foundation of Phillipsburg.

Huck Boyd was the son of Mamie Alexander Boyd, for whom Boyd Hall is named.

Huck Boyd attended K-State and spent his career as a newspaper publisher in north central Kansas. He was active in community affairs and worked his way up through state and national politics.

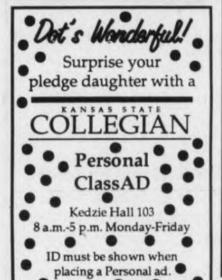

Boyd was Kansas' Republican National Committee representative for 20 years, and in national circles he was known as an advocate for rural people and rural states like Kansas.

When he died in 1987, a foundation was established to carry on his legacy of rural service. The institute was born out of this

The Huck Boyd National Center for Community Media, located in the A. Q. Miller School of Journalism Mass and Communications, provides help to community newspapers, smallmarket radio stations and rural cable TV companies. It also does research in other community media.

"We think it's very appropriate that the Huck Boyd National Center for Community Media be located at K-State," Director Ron Wilson said.

"Journalism was Huck Boyd's life's work, and it's appropriate the center be named in his honor and be located at K-State, which has a mission to serve all of Kansas," he

The center has temporary media workers who can take over for a professional in an emergency or when that person hasn't been able to get away from his or her job for a long time.

The center is planning an information clearinghouse that publishers and radio station managers can call with questions about their businesses.

Neibergall said the information house will be able to give them answers, or at least a database that

It is also working on a multicounty cooperative that shows how rural counties can cooperate and share services more efficiently.

Wilson said the program is visiting communities and has a radio program called "Kansas Profile" that discusses rural Kansans who are innovative or entrepreneurial.

The third project is the

For the first time, the group performed in the round, which means there was not a bad seat in the house. The band has continued that style of performance to ensure fans' satisfaction.

Def Leppard is meticulous, not only on the road, but in the studio as well, taking three years to perfect "Adrenalize." The band is known to record and re-record until work meets strict standards.

FINAL ANALYSIS

Always remember not to mix violets, lilies and carnations. It could be a deadly combination.

In "Final Analysis," Richard Gere portrays psychiatrist Issac Barr, who treats Diane (Uma Thurman) for her psychotic behavior. She hints that her behavior is related to the symbolism of certain flowers.

Enter Diane's sister, Heather (Kim Basinger). She meets with Barr, tells him a little family history. They have a little coffee, a little sex, and boom, they're in love. Try to explain this to her gangster ex-husband, with whom she is still required to live.

children. Spouses who are not students can still use Lafene for 100-percent coverage as long as they pay the Lafene service fee, which students pay with tuition.

The Farm Bureau Insurance company in Manhattan also has a plan for students.

Andy McIlvaine, agent for Farm Bureau, said their student plan is with Blue Cross/Blue Shield and provides two options for students.

The first costs $56.48 monthly and has a $500 deductible, and the second costs $48.41 monthly with a $1000 deductible. Each of these options is for ages 20 and under. For ages 20-24 the cost for the $500 deductible goes up to $65.28.

Applications for the student insurance plan are available at both the Student Governing Association office and Lafene.

All undergraduates enrolled in at least seven credit hours and graduate students enrolled in at least three credit hours are eligible for the policy.

The enrollment period for the insurance plan begins the first day of fee payment and ends 31 days after.

Agriculture offered expansion funds

ROY GRABER Collegia

K-State has been offered more than $4 million to expand and improve the College of Agriculture.

Sen. Bob Dole, R-Kan., announced Aug. 11 U.S. Senate allocated funds for K-State agricultural facilities and programs. The money has been granted for fiscal year 1993, effective Oct. 1. The funds will be used primarily for the expansion of Throckmorton

The original construction of Throckmorton, also known as Phase One, was completed in 1981. A total of $1.35 million has been allocated for the current project, Phase Two.

Part of Phase Two, the greenhouses north Throckmorton, has already been completed.

Gary Paulsen, professor of agronomy and member of the Plant Science Building Committee, said a total of 96,000 square feet will be added to Throckmorton on the east and west sides of the building.

After construction is complete, the agronomy, horticulture, forestry, recreational resources and plant pathology departments will all be housed in Throckmorton.

Paulsen said the College of Agriculture will reap the benefits of similar departments working more closely together.

Currently, the bulk of the horticulture department is in Waters

Hall, and most of the forestry department is in Call Hall.

The agronomy department is spread between Throckmorton and Waters halls and the Waters Hall

Though Paulsen said he was thankful for the grant, he also said K-State has been waiting for this expansion for a long time.

"I knew of some faculty in the late 1940s who were planning for some new facilities," Paulsen said.

"But back in 1957, the agronomy wing in Waters burned. As a consequence, Waters Hall was renovated," he said.

"That greatly delayed the building. Finally, in the 1970s, we received the funding for Phase Paulsen said corners were cut during the construction of Phase One because of inflation trouble during the late 1970s. He said some floors, for example, weren't tiled.

"We've been much more fortunate because inflation has been low," he said. "We're getting all we wanted for Phase Two, plus a few alternate needs. It's very, very hard to predict whether or not the money is going to cover the needs, but it looks like we'll be able."

An additional $159,000 has been allocated to help fund the Wheat Genetics Resource Center, based at Throckmorton. This center works to improve wheat programs in the United States and internationally.

"This is going to give us some of Iowa State University on this the finest facilities in the nation," Paulsen said. "It will allow us to do some work in breeding that we haven't been able to before.

"It will help us do a better job in serving agriculture. There can be powerful multiplier effects, because when we come up with new varieties of wheat, alfalfa, sorghum or soybeans, it can mean millions of dollars to agriculture."

Other areas boosted by government funding include alfalfa and canola research programs. Like the wheat genetics research program, the money is granted to help develop new grain varieties, as well as improve existing ones.

The alfalfa program received $125,000, and $100,000 has been given for canola research.

A $94,000 grant will make possible first-year funding for water conservation techniques research at K-State. A $100,000 grant has been issued for the development of statewide agricultural informational programs.

However, the biggest bulk of the government funding - $1.942 million - will go toward a foodsafety program.

For the fourth consecutive year, this project researches techniques to help the beef, poultry and pork industries assure consumers that there is a safe supply of meat available. K-State will work with the U.S. Department of Agriculture, the University of Arkansas and

Curtis Kastner, professor of animal sciences and industry and research coordinator, said the project will not only research ways to make meat safer, but it will also study ways to extend its shelf life.

"If we could find ways to increase the shelf life, that would be very important to the economy, as far as exporting and shipping internationally is concerned," he

K-State's College of Agriculture has also received some federal funds not included in those Dole announced.

David Mugler, associate dean of agriculture, said for the second year in a row K-State received $130,000, which is the maximum funding permitted through the USDA Higher Education Programs Challenge Grants Program.

He said North Carolina State University was the only other school to receive the maximum allocation.

These federal dollars will be used to conduct a workshop series on mandatory components of college teaching and its effectiveness, Mugler said.

He said satellite and telecommunication technologies will be used in these workshops.

"We've been faring very well," Mugler said. "Not many people max out, but we had some faculty members write some awfully good

▶5TH GM PLANT IDLED BY STRIKE

DETROIT (AP) - A fifth General Motors Corp. assembly plant was idled today by a United Auto Workers strike at a GM parts-making plant in Ohio. At least six more plants risk

In all, 25,900 GM workers are on furlough because of a strike by 2,400 workers at a metal parts fabricating plant in Lordstown, Ohio. That number could grow by thousands in coming days. Negotiations resumed today in Lordstown as the strike entered its sixth day. The key issue is job security.

The Wentzville, Mo., plant with about 4,200 workers was the latest to run out of parts, said GM Flint Division spokeswoman Laura Joseph.

► AIR FARES BOUNCING BACK UP

NEW YORK (AP) - Many airlines are raising ticket prices in hopes of ending the heavy losses sustained in summertime price wars. The increases also result from travel-discount expirations.

But with fewer people traveling, the increases might not stay, airline analysts said. The first round of fall price discounting expired Tuesday, increasing fares within the continental United States by about 30 percent. A second round expires Saturday.

On the same day, most airlines will also raise prices by $10 to $40 in a round of increases initiated by Continental Airlines. United Airlines and USAir, however, will raise fares by about $10 to

Quayle greeted by fans, foes

ASSOCIATED PRESS

KANSAS CITY, Mo. - Vice President Dan Quayle followed the campaign trail Tuesday to Kansas City, where he faced a crowd about equally divided between supporters and opponents.

Quayle arrived at the Kansas City Downtown Airport just before 6:30 p.m., about half an hour behind schedule.

The long wait gave Bush-Quayle supporters as well as backers of Democratic nominee Bill Clinton time to exchange yells and jeers. As Republicans shouted, "Four more years!" the Democrats in the crowd responded, "Not!"

Quayle left his plane and headed across the tarmac to a roped-off area lined two-deep by supporters and foes, the Bush-Quayle backers in front. Placards reading "Lesbian and Gay Civil Rights" were waved just inches from his face as he shook hands with men, women and children carrying Bush-Quayle signs.

A Quayle staff member traveling with the vice president said the opposition in the crowd of about 200 was the most Quayle had drawn in a day that began with appearances in several small towns in southwestern Georgia. But Quayle smiled throughout, working his way down the line to where a band and a knot of photographers and reporters waited to ask him about campaign issues. "Look, the president already said he made one big mistake, and that was to go along with the Democratic Congress" on a tax hike, Quayle said in a response to a question about whether President Bush would cut taxes in his second

"It cost us jobs. They'll never do it again. And this time we're talking about cutting taxes, restraining spending, and we feel that that is the recipe to creating more jobs," he said.

As Quayle climbed into a limousine, the crowd renewed its chants of "Four more years" and "No more Bush." Responding to the former, Quayle took a microphone and said: "With this crowd, and this enthusiasm, there's absolutely no doubt in my mind we're going to have four more years of Bush and Quayle.

His agenda free for the evening, Quayle headed to the Westin Crown Center hotel in downtown Kansas City.

Missouri is likely to be a hard-fought state as the election approaches. Both Republicans and Democrats have said their candidates or surrogates would campaign frequently in the state in the weeks ahead.

Quayle's schedule for Wednesday includes a discussion at a private home with participants in the Kansas City School District's Parents as

FARRELL LIBRARY

Student input key in repairs

■ The architects plan to meet with students throughout the design and construction of the library expansion and renovation.

Brent Bowman and Associates of Manhattan have been chosen to design the expansion and renovation of Farrell Library. The firm was chosen by a panel consisting of representatives from K-State, the Kansas Board of Regents and the state. Dean of Libraries Brice Hobrock said the selection process was one of the most carefully done in the history of Kansas. University Architect Skyler Harper also voiced his confidence in the process. "We feel they are very qualified," he said. Bowman's firm was chosen Aug. 26 from a group of five finalists, after the panel reviewed structures designed by the final applicants. At the Aug. 27 Student Senate meeting, Harper and Hobrock stressed Bowman's interest in student input and said Bowman intends to meet with students periodically throughout the design and construction time. They also said the firm will consider designs submitted by architecture students last spring.

Part of the $28-million project will be paid for with a $5-million bond issue K-State students passed last November. The University has raised another $5 million, and the remaining $18 million will come from state revenues.

Hobrock said he expects a 1993 groundbreaking. Completion is slated for spring

Pi Kappa Phi may get a new fraternity house through the KSU Foundation.

The Foundation hopes to rezone pasture land on North Manhattan Avenue as greek housing, said Dave Weaver, vice president for real estate at the Foundation. This is part of tentative long-term planning, and it won't happen overnight, he said.

"I feel we will be able to acco ...plish it, but we're in a very preliminary stage," he said. "It's not a done deal."

The fraternity's original house was destroyed by fire June 29, 1991. The Riley County Police Department is still investigating the fire and did not wish to comment on the cause.

Pi Kappa Phi faculty adviser Tim Lindemuth said the members would like to replace the former 37-man house with a 60-man house, but the city will not allow such an expansion on the original site.

The fraternity has made a proposal to K-State that calls for the creation of a new greek housing district, Lindemuth said. Weaver said K-State then requested that the Foundation take over the project.

Weaver said there are time-consuming many details.

"The zoning would be changed. There would be new construction of streets, and all the utilities would have to be made available for the new residences," Weaver said.

Weaver said the North Manhattan site is an excellent one. "It's beautiful, close to campus, and close to other greek houses," he said. Members of Pi Kappa Phi

Engineering gets funding for new undergrad library

The College of Engineering has received $2.5 million to create an undergraduate library.

Alice Fiedler of St. Petersburg,

Fla., made the donation. "Alice Fiedler's gift will allow our College of Engineering to have an outstanding, state-of-the-art library," Dean Donald Rathbone said. "The library will supplement our excellent academic programs and help us to better educate our undergraduates. We are eternally grateful for Fiedler's generosity."

Fiedler previously gave $500,000 to create an endowed engineering professorship. The gifts have created trusts with the KSU Foundation.

The gifts are memorials to Fiedler's husband, George, a K-State engineering graduate. George Fiedler died in 1988. He specialized in the design of instrumentation. automatic controls and data handling systems, and he worked in both the private sector and with the government.

The library will be named the George and Alice Fiedler Library and will be located in Durland Hall.

As a new building, it is part of the Durland Phase II and will continue into Phase III, Rathbone said. The phases detail the continuing expansion of the hall.

"We are in the preliminary stages of the project," Rathbone said. "We are working with concepts and plans produced by one of the K-State architectural

"Eventually, we will be making some decisions," Rathbone said. "Then, we will work with a professional design firm."

K-State President Jon Wefald said the new engineering library is an important step to improving the University's library system.

Rathbone said Farrell's expansion project is going to have a tremendous effect on the engineering library, and the two will work together often.

"I feel our new library will allow Farrell some flexibility related to engineering," Rathbone said. "It will also help them with more space."

Brice Hobrock, dean of libraries, said, "Dean Rathbone and I both agree that the new engineering library should be part of the KSU library system. It should be considered as another professional library, like our architecture and vet-med libraries."

The library will be a good influence for the students in the engineering college, Hobrock said.

"However, it will not be convenient for everyone," Hobrock said. "We want to install an electronic system in this library as well as the others to help minimize the inconvenience of finding information."

Rathbone said the library will be larger than the other branch libraries because money is not a problem at this time.

Rathbone said no project deadlines have been set.

Achmed Valk, new K-State dance program director, said he forsees growth and development in the upcoming year.

"The dance department is very good. That's why I said yes to the Originally from Germany, Valk began dancing at the age of 12. At 18, he joined his first professional dance company.

After dancing for two years with a company in France, he traveled with a show to Las Vegas, where he taught dance in a professional studio.

Valk then joined the Sacramento Ballet Co. in Sacramento, Calif., and received his master's in fine arts from the University of California at Irvine.

"Students seem more motivated relation to funding," Valk said.

in Kansas," Valk said. "Maybe there is less distraction here."

One weakness of the current dance program is the low number of males involved in the program. Currently, there are only three male dancers, and Valk said he hopes to have the opportunity to recruit and promote dance as a respectable profession for men.

Valk said his long-term goal for the dance program is for it to become its own college.

"The program can only grow in Presently, there are 16 dance majors in the department. Valk said his short-term goal is to deliver high-quality dance

"I would like to renew ideas on the vision of the dance program," Michelle Peters, sophomore and former dance major, said she believes Valk will benefit the dance program.

"The dance department needs a change," Peters said.

University offers students services to aid with job hunt

REBECCA OLIVAS

Getting a job may prove difficult for the college student, but there is

One of the first places students should look is the job board in the K-State Union, said Larry Moeder, director of Student Financial Assistance.

The board is updated daily and contains job opportunities from various offices on campus and in the community. A student may also go to any department on campus to apply for a job. The classified ads in the Collegian are also great place to look, Moeder said.

"There are two types of campus employment," Moeder said. "There is college work-study and campus payroll. One may be awarded the ACT Family Financial Statement. Work-study is awarded based on financial need.

Moeder said students should be aggressive about applying for jobs. "It is important that applicants dress appropriately, prepare a brief college work-study after filling out . resume with past work experiences and present themselves in a positive way, because there is going to be a lot of competition," he said.

There is also help at the Career Planning and Placement Center in "The center will provide assistance to students finding onand off-campus employment," said Tracey Fraser, assistant director of the center.

The center was formed through a grant provided by the Educational Opportunity Fund.

"We are very excited to be serving the campus and the community and all parties involved," Fraser said. "We have numerous other services that people can be tapping into prior to getting their degree.

There's a lot more than a great calculator waiting for you when you purchase an HP 48SX or an HP 48S between June 1, 1992, and October 31, 1992. You'll get a bonus book that's good for free software, a free PC link cable and hundreds of dollars back on applications-like electrical and mechanical engineeringmemory cards, training tools, games, and HP's infrared printer.

It's a really big offer. Worth more than $500. And it's going to make your HP 48 calculator even more valuable to you. The free serial cable lets you exchange information with your PC. And the free software disk lets you enter and plot equations easily, do 3D plotting, and analyze polynomials.

Beyond all the bonuses, you'll have the right calculator for your most challenging classes. HP 48 calculators have over 2100 built-in functions and offer a unique combination of graphics and calculus.

Head over to the campus bookstore now. After all, you don't see this kind of deal every day. HP calculators. The best for your success.

Bikers' needs must be heeded

THE ISSUE

There is a lack of adequate facilities for bicyclists on campus.

WE SUGGEST

More biking paths and increasing the current ones, more bike racks, and a larger awareness of bicycle safety rules.

It's a given that many college campuses have parking shortages.

But a bicycle parking shortage is ridiculous. Bike racks all over campus from McCain Auditorium and the K-State Union to Cardwell Hall are usually filled to capacity.

Given no choice, a number of riders are forced to chain their bikes to trees, fences and handicapped railings. Then, they receive tickets.

We already have an automobile parking problem on campus. The administration has shown it lacks either the money or the desire to fix the problem.

Riding bicycles to class should be encouraged. However, the current accommodations made for cyclists are poor at Bicycle routes are few and far between. Often, they follow the steepest hill slopes and heaviest traffic patterns.

Many riders use sidewalks instead, risking the safety of pedestrians.

The problem can be fixed with only small

First, allow for some of the larger and heavily ridden sidewalks to contain a foot or so for bike paths.

Good examples are the sidewalks on the south and northeast sides of McCain. The widths allow for the addition, and the traffic organization would be a welcomed change for riders and pedestrians alike.

Secondly, purchase additional bike racks for areas on campus where the racks are often full. For example, the racks around Eisenhower Hall.

With all the engineering and design students on campus, surely we could have both functional and artistically original bike racks for practically

Finally, inform bicycle riders of the policies changed for their benefit with brochures at enrollment or at a Union display table. Remind them of the laws that govern them. Many bicyclists break the law because of ignorance, not delinquency.

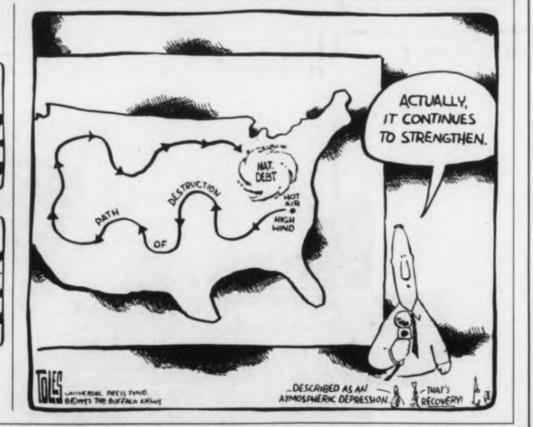

The changes would be welcomed by riders and pedestrians. And, they would be a simple and cost-effective way for the administration to show the University cares about those who bike to campus.

Leftover fees not for Senate fun

Rent, phone bills and utilities pillage my checkbook. Ah, the high-finance college way of life.

While I and many others toil in the financial woes the first of the month bestows, our beloved Student Senate was frolicking in the wilds of Camp Wa-shun-ga this weekend.

A bill has been proposed that would use leftover student fees to absorb part of the cost of the trip. The bill passed its first reading, and it will be voted on Thursday.

This retreat was supposed to expediate and facilitate the "gettingto-know-you process." This was accomplished through playing cards, taking sun-drenched canoe rides and roasting weenies around a

Now they return tanned, rested and cohesive. We can expect great things from this year's Senate, knowing they have all been properly socialized and acquainted at our expense. What do they think, students are made of money? That stuff doesn't grow on trees, you

The portion they want to pay for — $595 — works out to about $8 per senator. If used properly, that can lead to quite a bit of fun.

For instance, one local drinking establishment offered $.75 cans of beer this last weekend. After a little math, that equates to just more than 10 beers per senator. One can only imagine the creative policies they could come up with after a few beers, much less 10.

Or maybe the movies are your thing. With $8, not only could you see a show, but hell, there would even

possibilities are endless. It is such a great idea, this whole "getting acquainted" thing. If only we all could enjoy same luxury. Say you're feeling a little lonely and want to bond with about 70 different people? We could saunter off to the Student Governing Association offices in the K-State Union and ask for our own bonding allowance. From around the back would come Student Body President Jackie McClaskey sporting a chipper smile and toting the Student Government bank-deposit bag.

Dipping into the bag, she would hand over some cash and say, "Happy bonding, my friend."

Oh, if only we were so fortunate. Individual socialization subsidies might not work as well as an allcampus shindig.

Taking into consideration the fiscal woes of higher education, we would have to keep costs down as I am sure our beloved Senate did. Students could assemble in Memorial Stadium, play games and tell ghost stories.

We could have potato-sack races and duck-calling contests during the day. At night, everyone could sit around a bonfire, munch on Always Save cheese puffs and drink Shasta chocolate soda.

But the chance of that happening is about as likely as students being able to smoke in the Union again. So, we are left to our own devices of paying bills, meeting people and subsidizing the social life of student senators.

Since it is our money they use, I think I must offer a few funding alternatives.

One would be a bake sale in the Union. There are plenty of hungry people with money to burn loitering about the premises. Besides, with Union prices so inflated, it leaves the door open for some serious price wars, which in turn will stimulate spending and get the

Another possibility would be senators donating plasma to help underwrite their bonding desires. It only takes about one hour per donation, and a person can give twice in a week. The reward for this is not only a great deal of social pride but also $25. One can only imagine what torrid exploits are elected representatives could get themselves into with that kind of dough.

Yet another possibility is the garage sale. A bit boring and cliche', but dependable nonetheless. Besides if memory serves there is plenty of old furniture looking for a nice home.

If all else fails, there is always the car wash thing. It worked wonders for my high school drill team, which didn't have a lick of talent but seemed to have plenty of money. Sound familiar? Senate could spend one Saturday a semester washing the vehicles of those they serve. Outfitted in his day-glo Speedo, Ed Skoog could flag down cars and cajole drivers into a nice scrub and shine.

Or maybe Senate could just meet people without having to trot off to the wilds surrounding Junction City. Maybe, just maybe, they could plan policies, draw up resolutions and divvy out funds, because that's their job.

RELIGION

Having true faith in God is all or nothing

Editor,

Recently, a letter was sent to the editor boasting that 95 percent of Americans believe in God. But, I would like to ask the author if this is supposed to mean anything.

If this statistic is supposed to make us assume that 95 percent of Americans are "Christians," then I beg you to open your eyes a little and look around. Do you see 95 percent of Americans standing up for godly principles such as love, joy, peace, goodness and self-control (Gal. 5:22), or do you see most of them demanding their freedom to practice sexual immorality, hatred, jealousy, selfish ambition, drunkednness, murder, malice, gossip and disobedience to their parents (Gal. 5:19-21 and Rom. 1:29-

Do you think that 95 percent of Americans actually believe that Jesus Christ is really God's son, who really was born of a virgin, rose from the dead and has the power to save people from eternal death for their sins? Or do you think most Americans could even admit that they are sinners and have a need for a savior?

As I look around, I see the majority of Americans not only showing by their words and actions that God and his principles have no place in their lifestyles, but I also see them putting down, stepping on and ridiculing those people who actually do believe in the authority of the Lord Jesus Christ and the infallibility of God's word.

I've met so many 'Christians" who don't think it's necessary to take God's word to heart and don't even believe the Bible as truth. I urge those people to take a look at the basic foundations of the faith they claim and then ask themselves why they don't adhere to it.

And for those of you who say, "I don't believe in God. Isn't that all that matters?" I urge you to read the second chapter of James. And pay close attention to Chapter 19: "You believe that there is one God. Good! But even the demons believe that - and shudder."

SOAP OPERA

Other cultures offended by 'Days'

In the last couple years, there has been much emphasis placed on K-State's cultural diversity, and we've found that encouraging. We have participated in events to further awareness of and appreciation for other cultures.

Also, we have contributed our time, talent and money to Racial/Ethnic Harmony Week and the Multicultural Leadership Conference, among others.

Perhaps you can imagine our shock, pain and dismay at seeing "One Day to Live" in the Collegian. We are not arnused at this pitiful attempt at humor. It is not funny, and in fact, it rudely belittles others. If Sue Parmann were going to school in Russia and saw a similar piece about Americans, it would probably elicit the same reaction our Russian students must be

PRESIDENTIAL RACE

Bush did not crush the communist regime

OK, let's get one thing straight:

George Bush had nothing to do with the fall of communism in the Soviet Union and Eastern Europe.

This observation is necessitated by the Republican convention, which got off to a rousing start by, among other things, crediting George Bush with being the savior of freedom.

The Berlin Wall fell in 1989, the very year Bush took office. You cannot possibly see a connection between these two events, unless you are passionately determined to.

And the fall of the Berlin Wall was the symbolic proof that it was over for the communists. It showed beyond a doubt that the Soviets had no thoughts of trying to step in to save communism in Eastern It is astounding that people would try to rewrite history that is so

Tomahawk now a part of history

Due to complaints, the cheer will no longer be encouraged in Arrowhead ASSOCIATED PRESS

KANSAS CITY, Mo. - Responding to complaints from American Indians about fans doing the tomahawk chop, the Kansas City Chiefs and their sponsors say they will no longer encourage the cheer.

But team officials also said they would not discourage fans from dressing up as Indians or organizing tomahawk-chop cheers on their own. Indian groups have campaigned against the chop, saying it is offensive to their culture.

"We are just more or less discontinuing the promotion of it," said Bob Moore, Chiefs director of public relations. But, he added, "We will not censor the public."

At games the last two seasons, team cheerleaders led fans in the arm-swinging motion simulating the use of a tomahawk. The cheer was accompanied by the stadium band playing a war-chant beat or graphics flashed on Arrowhead Stadium's giant screen.

During last Friday's preseason game against the Indianapolis Colts, many fans still used the tomahawk chop, but the public address system did not provide a war-chant beat.

American Indians staged several protests last year at Arrowhead and other stadiums nationwide. They also protested at Atlanta Braves and Washington Redskins games.

Ellen Papineau, one of several local American Indians who protested at Arrowhead last season, said she is pleased about the

"I think it is great that we are making people rethink things that had become automatic," she

But Papineau, of the Winnebago tribe, said she is concerned that many sports fans still think of American Indians as mascots or cheerleading symbols.

Corporate sponsors of the Chiefs, including Price Chopper food stores and the Jones Store Co., said they will not promote the chop.

Last year's Price Chopper commercial enticed fans to chop as they chanted: "Chiefs and Chopper, Chiefs and Chopper."

The new Price Chopper commercial has a more singsong version that used the chorus; "P.C. Chiefs. Chopper."

We tried to delete any references that would be offensive to anyone out there," said Maurice Henry, a Price Chopper spokesman.

HUNTIN' 'N' FISHIN'

Doves love dope

"Weren't for doves, Noah wouldn't have ever found land." - old Gnostic maxim.

Hemp people perturb me.

When a clearly stoned freak comes up and says, "Marihuana, which my people call hemp, should be legalized because you can make sweaters and carpet out of it," I'm a little leery.

But when a dove-hunter tells me about hemp,

Mourning doves eat tons of dope seeds, according to a 1951 study by Golden Books editor and childhood hero Herbert S. Zim, Ph.D.

During hunting season, doves spend 45 percent of their feeding time in hemp fields. Twenty percent of fall doves roost in hemp fields, according to the study.

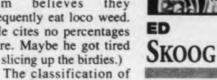

Maybe the hemp-heads have it right. Maybe the state's desire to eradicate marihuana runs counter to maintaining suitable hunting populations of dove.

And, it's not just doves. Dr. Zim says marihuana seeds account for 24 percent of the bobwhite quail diet.

(Want to know how these Dr.s discover these things? They slit open the bellies of birds and stay up all night counting the contents, like that scene in "Jaws" where Richard Dreyfuss and Roy Scheider find an Ohio license plate and a human arm in a blue shark's belly.)

Pheasant, an introduced upland game bird, feast mainly on corn, but Dr. Zim believes they frequently eat loco weed. (He cites no percentages here. Maybe he got tired of slicing up the birdies.)

marihuana as a noxious weed and as a Class I drug make hemp fields fugitives from the law. When a field or even a plant is discovered, it is cut down and burned.

Pals of mine have been fined out of college because they played Frisbee in a dope field. Farmer called the Hiawatha sheriff on 'em, biggest drug bust in years - two city boys frolicking by the highway.

They don't arrest doves. Maybe they should. Imagine a reefer-frenzied flock of a thousand cooing doves. Imagine the crops lost each year to the munchies.

Do doves get cottonmouth? Hard to say, But I do know this: When you're crouched by a pond, shotgun crooked in your armpit, you're readying yourself. You are a good shot, which does almost no good when the doves fly past.

That zigzag pattern. Can't shoot them cleanly when they fly surprised. For 8-ounce birds, they can maneuver like gazelles, or like ... like a drug Drunkenness has been documented in cedar waxwings, titmice and other berry-eaters as the result of fermented berries. And then there's Aesop's crow, filling a wine bottle with pebbles.

Not to side with Darwin, but getting high could be an evolutionary advantage. It would make them unpredictable and thus harder for the hunter to guess where and when to predate.

So, patches of marihuana should be allowed to grow away from roads, and they should be supervised by the Fish and Game Commission to ensure a diversity of food sources for doves and

But I still don't think it should be legalized. All the hemp sweaters I've seen look awful.

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (AP)- George Brett's single moved him past Mickey Mantle on the career RBI list and capped a four-run seventh inning Tuesday night that lifted Kansas City over Texas 8-3.

Trying to break a personal five-game losing ( skid, Nolan Ryan struck out five and did not issue a walk. Ryan left after six innings with a 2-0 lead on Juan Gonzalez' American League-leading 39th home run.

But he was relieved starting the seventh by Todd Burns (3-5), and the Rangers proceeded to self-destruct. First Burns hit Brian McRae leading off, then Gary Thurman singled him to third. When David Howard lifted a routine fly ball to medium center, right fielder Jack Daugherty collided with center fielder Gonzalez, who dropped the ball as McRae scored.

JOSE NOT HURRYING TO GET TO TEXAS

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (AP) - Jose Canseco had been with the Texas Rangers less than 24 hours when the first hints of controversy wafted through the clubhouse.

Instead of hurrying to Kansas City to be with his new team, the former Oakland slugger sent word he would join the Rangers Thursday in New York, leaving his new bosses and teammates to explain his absence as no big deal.

"What do you want me to say?" manager Toby Harrah told a questioner Tuesday as the Rangers dressed for a game against the Royals. "You have a couple of days to report. You don't have to report the next flight out. I am very glad Jose Canseco is going to join us on our off day in New York. I honestly believe if Jose stays healthy, he's going to have some great years in Texas."

Satire merges past with present

If you enjoy satirical parodies with a Woody Allen-flair for direction, "The Icicle Thief" is the movie to see.

This film is intentionally reminiscent of "The Bicycle Thief," from the first stage of realism with a modern day television studio to a quasi neorealistic drama about an unemployed laborer, played by Maurizio Nichetti, who struggles to keep his family together in the aftermath of WW II.

The movie is framed within a TV broadcast as the bushy-haired Nichetti plays the director during the first national broadcast of his film, "The Icicle Thief." From the moment he enters the TV studio, chaos reigns. He splashes paint on his already ripped clothing and loses his pants in the process.

As the movie progresses into a third layer of reality, a contemporary middle-class Italian family is halfheartedly viewing "The Icicle Thief" on their living

Finally, the movie's fourth level is a series of full-color glossy commercial ads that periodically interrupt the telecast. This eventually leads to the massacre of the fuzzy black and white effect in which the povertystricken family lives. As the levels bleed into one another, the family escapes to a "better" life in colorful TV land. When this occurs, Nichetti enters the film's telecast in a frantic attempt to cure the collapsing script.

Nichetti outdoes himself by portraying many characters as well as merging the past with the present, black and white with color and reality in the film.

"The Icicle Thief," in Italian with English subtitles, is serious in its theme, yet humorous in its satirical comedy approach. Nichetti keeps his audience entertained well with an almost Keystone Kops style of pace.

The UPC Kaleidoscope film The Icicle Thief" will be showing tonight and Thursday at 7 and 9:30 p.m. in Union Forum Hall. Admission is $1.75.

Boulevards 11th Street Bar and Grill, formerly the Spot, has been renovated, and the changes run much deeper than in name alone.

Cosmetic changes throughout the interior of the building, as well as changes in basic business practices, have given a new attitude to the long-time Aggieville merchant.

"The major problems we had were that the stage that the bands played upon was really nothing more than an extension of the dance floor, so we built a new stage, and a new dance floor," said Kevin Henao, Boulevards manager.

Henao said. "Overall, we'd just like to take what has worked in the past and Teachers program.

The state-funded program sends volunteers into homes to train parents to do a better job of raising children from birth to age 5.

About 7,500 families are being served by Parents as Teachers in Kansas City, coordinator Pat Tennison said Tuesday.

"I'm pleased he's coming here," Tennison said of Quayle. "Hopefully he'll learn about the concerns of families in today's world and how valuable this program is."

Later Wednesday, Quayle is to speak at a luncheon sponsored by the Greater Kansas City Chamber of Commerce before leaving for Tulsa, Okla.

Several Southern states are viewed as competitive because of the sour economy and the Democrats' all-Southern ticket.

COMPUTING III

Gallagher named to systems development

JANET SATTERLEE

Collegian

Computer speed was about 30 characters per second when Tom Gallagher began his job as director of K-State's Computing and Network Services.

That was 22 years ago. Today, computer speed is about 120 characters per second, but Gallagher said it could reach 960 characters by Christmas. Students used terminal labs rather than microcomputer labs, and the telephone system was not a part of the mainframe then, he said. As funds became available, the mainframe system was updated, and various connections were added to the computer terminals and microcomputers to allow individuals both on and off campus access to the computer's mainframe, he said.

Several years ago, the telephone business was added to the mainframe by rewiring the campus and installing a phone switch, which allowed off-campus students to dial in to the modems on Gallagher has been named director of systems development in the Provost's Office. Steve Welch will serve as interim director of CNS.

In his new position, Gallagher will work in Farrell Library on various projects to implement future computer systems. He will also assist in the design of the library's extension with other libraries and the renovation of current library space.

Robert Kruh, vice provost for academic services and instruction, said Gallagher was looking for an opportunity to become more directly involved with the computer system. Kruh said he will now have fewer administrative concerns.

"At his request, we looked at some real needs the University has, and this really looked like an opportunity to take advantage of talents that he has in great depth," Kruh said.

Those talents will be put to use, as Gallagher will assist in the planning of future NOTIS systems. NOTIS is the library's current system, introduced about three years ago, that allows students to locate a periodical or book quickly by doing a computer search that lists the call number and location.

Gallagher said K-State has decisions to make about using new NOTIS products as they continue to be developed.

Studio B remains empty as grant search goes on

Collegian

Purchase of equipment for Dole Hall's Studio B waits on federal grant money - for now.

If equipment was available, Studio B would be used for video production classes radio/television students in the A.Q. Miller School of Journalism and Mass Communications.

"We continue to apply for grants and have dialogue with Sen. Bob Dole," said Mel Chastain, director of the Educational Communications Center in Dole Hall. "We are exploring all options.

"Grantsmanship is part of regular life's work around here,"

Chastain said. "Some come through, and some don't."

No grant money has become available thus far.

"As far as I can tell you at the moment, nothing has changed, although we are still interested in getting it equipped," said Carol Oukrop, director of the journalism school. "We're hoping — we're praying - that federal funding will come through."

The construction of Dole Hall was financed by a $5.9-million federal grant several years ago. Its primary purpose is to be a communications center for the Kansas Board of Regents.

Dole Hall's Studio A, the that it would cost about $50,000 a Educational Communications Center, is fully equipped.

Chastain said there are two fourhour labs for the radio/television students - one on Wednesday and one on Friday - in Studio A. It does not cost the journalism school anything to use this studio.

Oukrop said the equipment in Studio A is state of the art. The equipment is the same used to transmit Spanish and French classes high-school classrooms throughout Kansas and other states.

If the journalism school were to pay for the use of the kind of equipment available in Studio A. Oukrop said, it could be estimated year. The lecture portions of radio/television classes are in Studio B.

Oukrop said if federal funding does not come through, the journalism school will launch its own fund-raising effort to purchase

She said, however, that if the school had its own campaign, quality studio equipment may not be the top priority. Instead, the school would try to purchase equipment benefiting all journalism and mass communications students. Students in the radio/television curriculum make up about 20 percent of the journalism school,

The journalism school does own some of its own equipment, which is stored in McCain Auditorium.

"It's pretty primitive - not topof-the-line type of stuff," Oukrop said. "It's the best we've been able to do with the budget we have." Chastain said his department employs from 12 to 20 radiotelevision students during a

He said the department benefits by having talented interns.

"Obviously, we'd all like to have our own equipment, and we're working on that," Chastain said. "In the meantime, everyone is benefiting from the arrangement."

Kickapoo tribe shows interest in Wichita casino

Leaders say they are examining project seriously

ASSOCIATED PRESS

WICHITA - Kickapoo Indian leaders may consider getting involved with a proposed hotel and casino complex in Wichita.

An attorney for the Kickapoo tribe said Monday they would like a piece of the gaming pie in downtown Wichita if the state decides not to negotiate with an Oklahoma-based tribe involved with the project.

Lance Burr, attorney for the Kickapoo tribe, said the Kickapoos are interested in looking at the Wichita project very seriously, and that he has talked to the hotel developers about the possibility.

Wichita developer George Laham and the Wyandotte tribe of Oklahoma are negotiating with the city and state to build Riverport Plaza, a $100-million convention hotel and casino complex proposed for the east bank downtown.

David Elkouri, attorney for the developers, said he and Laham had approached the Kickapoos and other Kansas tribes about the Wichita project several months ago.

Elkouri said Kickapoo leaders were not interested in a Wichita casino then, and that they said their first priority was a proposed casino in Hiawatha.

But the ever changing issue of Indian gaming in Kansas has made Kickapoo leaders consider alternatives, Burr said.

"Probably what happened was the Kickapoos were concentrating so hard on the Hiawatha situation that they just didn't think much about the (Wichita) proposal," Burr

The Legislative Coordinating Council, a group of legislative leaders, will meet with leaders of Kansas tribes on Sept. 9.

Rain simulator helps research erosion

Hans Kok, assistant professor of agronomy, demonstrates the rain simulator at the Research Farms north of campus on Agronomy Field Day this summer. The simulator saturates plots of ground to be used in studying runoff.

K-State agronomy may build unit part

KATIE WALKER

A rainfall simulator may soon be built at K-State.

Hans Kok, assistant professor of agronomy, said the agronomy department could have its own simulator by next semester. It is estimated to cost $25,000.

One simulator, on loan from the University of Nebraska, toured Kansas last month to demonstrate the disastrous effects of erosion and what can be done to slow the process down.

"Once the proposal to get funding goes through the Ag Experiment Station and is approved, we can go ahead and build the equipment," said Philip Barnes, research and agricultural engineer. He will be constructing the simulator with the Kansas River Valley Experiment Field in Topeka.

The simulator can produce storms of 2.5 inches an hour, which are normal-size storms for Kansas. Even the same size of raindrops can be duplicated with special nozzles.

But the purpose of the simulator is not to create an exact replica of a Kansas storm. Its main uses are as a research tool and an extension tool, Barnes said.

Research is being done on preventing erosion and determining the effectiveness of pesticides and other chemicals.

As an extension tool, the simulator is demonstrated to various groups in Kansas. "Seeing the pesticide run-off is sometimes better than just being told about it," Barnes said.

The 1990 Farm Bill required farmers to reach a tolerable level of erosion by 1995, Kok said. Five tons of soil per acre each year is considered a tolerable level of erosion. Current levels are 20 tons Crop residue, which is everything left over after harvest, is usually plowed under, Kok said. By keeping the residue, farmers can reduce erosion by protecting their soil from the rain.

"Farmers should leave the crop residue, because rain will fall on it," Kok said. "It acts like a pillow to keep water from hitting the soil

"Hundreds of years ago, the area of Operation Desert Storm was the most fertile area in the world, but they let it erode, and they lost it. Now it's one big sandbox. And that's the United States in the future," he said.

If farmers do nothing to prevent erosion. Kok said in about 50 years, the topsoil will be lost and yields will go down drastically.

Erosion removes topsoil, which is better than subsoil for farming. Topsoil has all the organic matter and fertility, can hold water and is a good place for roots to grow, Kok said. Subsoil is like a "baby soil" that has not developed completely.

Once the topsoil is gone, it could take tens of thousands of years to get it back, Kok said.

Medical patches becoming popular treatment program

Prescriptions help wide variety of ailments

SHEDERA BAUSCH

Patchwork no longer refers to only quilting or fixing the hole in the knee of your pants.

It has become the answer for daily prescription takers and those are trying to kick the nicotine habit.

Medical patches are becoming a popular choice for people who suffer from high blood pressure, motion

In 1984, the nicotine patch was demonstrated showing it was capable of producing nicotine serum levels comparable to those received from smoking. Today, the nicotine patch is the highest-selling medical patch, with over 200 million three-month programs sold since they were approved in December.

The patch, which is applied on a hairless part of the body, controls the proper dosage through the use of a porous rate controller below the drug reservoir. The patch may be switched daily or weekly. depending on its purpose.

Dr. Keith Wright, a family physician, said he has 50 to 75 patients who are using the nicotine patch and smoking-cessation program to beat the cigarette habit.

He said his patients have been satisfied with the patches.

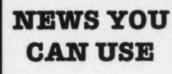

A small number of them have returned with complaints of skin irritation where the cigarette substitute patch is applied or nightmares due to the nicotine received during the night. This problem may also be remedied in the future with an 18-hour patch which administers the drug only during the day.

"If I prescribe the patches to a patient, I also encourage anyone using them to attend a smokingcessation program, which acts as moral support. You must stop smoking for the patch to work." Wright said.

The only problem Wright says the patches impose is their cost. Whether they take the place of nicotine or high blood pressure pills, they may cost more than $100

He feels like heel; she wants relationship

This is something new to the Collegian for all readers to use. If you have a personal question - a question about anything for that matter - or maybe you just want to get something off of your chest, please let me know.

I'll do my best to find an answer, give advice or just simply be a good listener.

DEAR CASSANDRA,

I'm a junior at a small Midwestern university. I never thought anything like this would happen to me, but here

A few months back, I bumped into an old female friend at my sister's wedding. One thing led to another, and before I could figure out what was happening, we were back at her place having sex.

I enjoyed the sex, but I now have a problem. She keeps writing and calling, and I have no desire for any type of commitment.

I feel like a heel, but I don't believe I've ever led her to believe that anything like a long-term relationship would happen.

I like her a lot, but the idea of being married or even committed at this point in my life makes me violently ill. Please help.

Signed, S.A., horny and single

DEAR S.A. Once you tell her the wonderful news, I think you are going to feel much worse from the kick in the groin you'll receive. You've got a problem, all right actually three - and your first one isn't trying to figure out who is going to be your next one-night stand. You say you feel like a heel? Well take a hint, buster. You are, and that is only your first problem.

The best way to prevent this situation from happening again, if casual sex is what you are looking for, is to lay down the ground rules with your partner before you have

This way, everything is up front and honest. However, some states view that as solicitation if money is involved and will throw you in jail.

More importantly, though, unless My question is how to let her you have been living on another planet, you must surely be aware that due to AIDS, casual sex is very risky business nowadays. This accounts for your second problem.

Let's be realistic.

It is obvious your chances of finding a willing partner (who is not a hooker) in the fashion I just described are very slim indeed.

That is why I can't accept your excuse that you didn't give her any indication of wanting something more permanent in a relationship.

To many women (and men), the sex act IS an indication of something serious, and I believe you knew beforehand that any mention of NOT wanting a serious relationship would most likely ruin your chances for lovemaking.

Therefore, I think you deserve to feel like a heel.

If you continue with this sort of sly, irresponsible behavior, signing yourself "horny and single" will become a permanent situation which is your third problem.

As for how to let Ms. "Fatal Attraction" down gently, you are too late. Take your medicine like a big boy, and just tell her straight out.

In the meantime, look on the bright side - after you tell her, you will never need to worry about finding work again. The Vienna Boys Choir is always in need of a few good

DEAR CASSANDRA,

I have a feeling that people talk about me behind my back. How do I confront these people, and what should I say to them?

D.T., K-State senior

DEAR D.T.,

People have been talking about other people since time began. It is called "gossip," and there is nothing you can do about it outside of making sure you do not do it.

Confrontation will do nothing to stop it, and it may even aggravate it more. My best advice is to ignore it. However, what concerns me is your apparent anxiety over it and the uncomfortable feelings you have.

People who are secure in their beliefs and abilities rarely worry about idle gossip. They know that their actions and accomplishments speak for themselves.

Try concentrating more on your daily activities and those things you do well or make you feel good about Think positive, and strive to develop a good mental attitude about yourself and life. Embrace those things you can do well, and accept those things you cannot do.

If in everything you try your hardest, then you have nothing to be ashamed of, least of all the jealous prattle of gossips.

Graduation Faire features companies

LANA SCHRATER Collegian

Ready or not, it is almost time for fall graduates to purchase all those accessory products for graduation. Oct. 6 and 7, the K-State Union Bookstore will sponsor the Fall Graduation Faire in the Union Courtyard. The Faire will have representatives from several companies and a variety of graduation paraphernalia for graduation attire and gift needs.

"One thing that was new for us last semester and that we will be continuing is that we offered a special price for the two days of the Faire for the seniors picking up their caps and gowns those days, said Nancy Bartell, clothing and gift buyer for the Union Bookstore.

The cap, gown and tassel are the same for all bachelor's degrees and can be purchased at the Union Bookstore.

The apparel worn by the faculty and students who are receiving a master's or doctoral degree can either be purchased or rented from the cap and gown company. The master's and doctoral regalia is different in appearance and is higher in price than the bachelor's attire. A bachelor's full regalia cost around $20, and the others cost about $450.

"So they (faculty, master's and doctoral students) come in and get measured, and then those measurements are sent off to be ordered and if they have to, they have to make special hoods for K-State graduates," said Kathy Yates, Bookstore supply manager.

For those who choose to order the regalia, purchases may be picked up Dec. 10 and 11 at the Bookstore.

items available Other specifically for graduation are clothing, rings, plaques for diplomas, desk accessories, pencils, cups, non-personalized and personalized invitations, Bartell said.

In the past, people have waited until the week of finals to buy all their desired equipment for graduation - which caused for confusion, Bartell said. There was not the right size left, nonpersonalized announcements would be sold out or deadlines might be missed for printing personal invitations. "The Graduation Faire is to make graduation as convenient as possible for the graduates so they can take care of everything at one time instead of letting it go to the last minute," Yates said.

This is the second annual Faire. Before Graduation Faire, students had to go to the Union on specific days when each company came. Now, everything can be done at one time. Items can still be purchased throughout the semester at the Bookstore, but the companies will be at the Faire only.

"Problems do arise, but we always have been able to take care of it," Yates said. "We've got a real good company that's been real good with working with us."

Mars may have life potential

ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON - Mars has the chemical elements needed for the evolution of life, experts say. However, it could never have happened if Mars has been without liquid water forever.

Scientists speaking Monday at the World Space Congress said if there were a plentiful supply of water on the surface of Mars millions of years ago, then the planet could have undergone the same evolution of life that many believe occurred on Earth.

"It all comes down to water and its essential role to life," said Rocco Mancinelli of NASA's Ames Research Center.

Mancinelli said if the planet has always been dry, it makes the prospects for life on Mars bleak.

Bruce Jakosky, of the laboratory for astronautics and space physics at the University of Colorado, said a rich body of evidence indicates that Mars once had a lush supply of liquid water.

Jakosky said spacecraft studies

New office space leads to relocations

Campus office locations have been shuffled with the acquisition of space in the KSU Foundation building on Anderson Avenue.

When one office or department moves to a new location, others relocate or expand into the vacated

Recently 200,000 library books were moved from the basement of Nichols Hall to the Foundation building. The movement began in May and was completed in June. The satellite library storage space occupies 20,000 square feet of the Foundation basement, and the first floor west and east wings. These areas were chosen to accommodate the weight of the books.

The vacant Nichols basement will be used for further consolidation of the speech department and the computing and information sciences department. The speech department's dance unit in the Ahearn Gymnasium and the computer laboratories in Fairchild Hall will expand into the vacated

The funds to modify the space for these units are in the budget for special maintenance in fiscal year

"With the movement of the dance unit to Nichols Hall, we will be together with the theater department. This move certainly makes more sense since we are in the theater department. Presently, we are separated, and it sometimes makes things difficult," said Luke Kahlich, associate professor of

Other academic units, such as the kinesiology department, will move into the vacated space in Ahearn. Meanwhile, the student financial assistance office will be the beneficiary of the Fairchild Hall space vacated by the computer laboratories.

The administrative systems office in the basement of Anderson Hall is moving. It will be moved to the Foundation building, leaving additional office space for the University budget and attorney's

DAN QUAYLE

Vice president speaks to Parents as Teachers during campaign stop in KC

TODD FERTIG

Increased parental participation in American youths' development should be the objective of government education programs, Vice President Dan Quayle stressed during a campaign stop Wednesday in Kansas City.

The focus of the family values debate shifted to education as Quayle met with proponents of the Parents as Teachers program during his hastily prepared visit.

"Education begins and should be reinforced at home," Quayle said, pointing to Parents as Teachers as an effort to strengthen families by working with them rather than supplanting them. Quayle met with leaders of the organization in a Jackson County residence yesterday morning.

Speaking at a luncheon attended by more than 700 members of the Greater Kansas City Chamber of Commerce, Quayle also repeated comments he made in the "Murphy Brown" speech regarding single parenthood. Those comments drew criticism from the media and entertainment industry.

Speaking in response to various negative remarks made at Sunday's Emmy Awards ceremony, Quayle blamed Hollywood for confusing and purposefully distorting his stance on parental responsibility.

"Hollywood is a stronghold of the adversary culture," Quayle said. "They choose not to join the discussion of values, but rather to attach and distort. Is it beyond all human possibility for Hollywood producers to tell the truth?"

Quayle drew laughter from the audience when he paused and smiled after reading the paragraph preceding the reference to the TV sitcom.

"Now this is where I started it all off," he mused before proceeding.

Quayle made few statements regarding President Bush or the campaign, focusing instead on issues dealing with families. He defended the term "family values" as neither meaningless nor mean-spirited.

"As a society, we simply must find ways to do better by our families and for our children," he said.

"There is no such thing as a family-neutral policy. Policies have a direct or indirect impact on family life and well-being, whether intended or not."

Quayle met with Parents as Teachers representatives to discuss the program designed to educate parents on child-rearing activities and strengthen partnerships between parents and schools.

Quayle said parents are children's first and most important teachers, particularly in value development.

"Where government acts, it should act to empower and strengthen our families and support their values," Quayle said.

"Such pro-family policies will succeed where other policies which try to displace or ignore the family — fail."

Dunn found innocent

ASSOCIATED PRESS

TOPEKA — Lisa Dunn was found innocent Wednesday on all counts for her role in a 1985 crime spree that ended in a shootout with law officers in northwest Kansas.

A jury of nine men and three women returned the verdict in Shawnee County District Court Wednesday afternoon, following three days of deliberations. Jurors, who on Tuesday had told the judge they were deadlocked, were not polled.

Dunn wept as the verdicts were read by a court bailiff after they were handed to presiding Judge James Macnish. She continued to cry as she was led from the courtroom to a nearby holding cell.

Jean Dunn, the 26-year-old Dunn's mother from Traverse City, Mich., also wept at the reading of the verdicts. John Dunn, Lisa's father, held his wife. The couple had been in court for the entire 2 1/2 weeks of the trial.

The verdicts, returned at 4:40 p.m. Wednesday, ended what court sources said was the longest deliberation in memory for a Shawnee County trial.

Arkansas is seeking to extradite her to face another murder charge stemming from the same crime spree. It was led by Daniel Remeta, Dunn's onetime boyfriend who is on death row in Florida for the murder in that state that launched the cross-country series of crimes.

Bill McCormick, Gov. Joan Finney's pardon attorney, said Kansas has little recourse but to turn Dunn over to Arkansas authorities.

The cornerstone of Dunn's defense was that she suffered from the battered woman syndrome and was compelled to participate in the crime spree.

KSU 5th cheapest in Big 8

KIP BEASLEY

On the surface, it may appear K-State students get a bargain for their money. To others, it may appear students are getting gypped.

In comparing K-State's tuition and campus privilege fees with the other Big Eight universities, K-State ranks fifth-cheapest.

K-State trails behind Oklahoma State University, the University of Oklahoma, the University of Nebraska and the University of Kansas. In-state undergraduate students in Oklahoma pay about $200 less than Kansas' undergraduate students.

Lower tuition is not always better.

"The biggest effect on our tuition is our faculty salaries," said Don Foster, K-State Registrar. "Salaries in Oklahoma schools could possibly be lower than those of the Kansas schools. Higher salaries tend to attract better-qualified teachers."

expansion and part of the Farrell Library expansion and renovation projects, Foster said.

"The difference is because the package of required fees is individually tailored for each university. Each campus sets its own general fees based on their needs," said Marvin Burris, associate director of budget with the Kansas Board of Regents.

Six of the Big Eight universities experienced an increase in tuition over last year. Again, both OSU and OU did not experience an increase.

Tuition at K-State and KU rose 10 percent for resident students and 12.5 percent for non-resident students from last fall, Burris said.

Next fall, resident and non-resident students can expect to pay more, as tuition will increase an additional 8 percent, Burris said. Of that 8 percent, 2 percent is being proposed by the regents to go into financing two student financial assistance programs.

Sea surge surprises Nicaragua

ASSOCIATED PRESS

MASACHAPA, Nicaragua — Splintered huts and buildings littered a 200-mile swath of Nicaragua's coast Wednesday following a tidal wave that killed at least 100 people and left thousands homeless.

Dozens were missing, and rescue workers expected the death toll to rise.

A massive earthquake at sea caused a wall of water up to 30 feet high to sweep over most of the Nicaraguan coast. It submerged islands and rolled more than a half mile inland in some spots, destroying beach-front homes and hotels, and scattering wrecked boats and cars.

As it retreated, the surge of water sucked people and small buildings out to sea.

DODGE CITY (AP) — A young Dodge City man has been charged with first-degree murder in the death of 15-month-old Jordan Keith, who died Monday of blows to the abdomen, Ford County Attorney Leigh Hood said.

Allen Stoffaran, 19, described by Hood's office as a friend of the child's mother, was charged with murder Wednesday. He was being held on $200,000 bond, with a preliminary hearing tentatively scheduled for Oct. 11.

CALIFORNIA GETS BUDGET

SACRAMENTO, Calif. (AP) — Gov. Pete Wilson signed a $57.6-billion budget Wednesday, ending 63 days of crisis in which the state paid bills with IOUs for the first time since the Great Depression.

The budget was delayed by wrangling over how much to cut to erase a $10.7-billion deficit. Support for cities, counties and other local governments was cut by $1.3 billion, and welfare grants were cut by 5.8 percent.

Add two more national awards to the growing list won by K-State faculty and students.

James Craig, professor in poultry sciences, won two firstplace awards from the 1992 Poultry Science Association meeting in Fayetteville, Ark.

Craig was the first recipient of the new Poultry Welfare Research Award for outstanding research in poultry welfare.

It is awarded in even-numbered years to the sole or senior author of published papers in the years preceding the award.

Craig received a plaque and monetary award for three papers written about the effects of beak trimming and behavior patterns in white leghorn pullets.

"Receiving this award pleased me a lot," Craig said. "It was the first time it was given, and there was a backlog of deserving people."

Craig, a professor for 32 of his 37 years at K-State, also received the Merck Award for Achievement in Poultry Science.

Winning two firsts at an annual association meeting places Craig among an elite few.

The poultry association described Craig as a pioneer in the study of behavioral genetics of domestic poultry.

Craig has taught courses in behavior of domestic animals, techniques in domestic animal behavior and genetics in poultry improvement, but his research has focused on poultry.

"In a sense, I'm a generalist," Craig said. "I pull in a lot of information from several areas and compare them."

Craig, who has a master's degree in animal genetics and a doctorate in genetics, is retired. He is remaining at the University as a professor emeritus.

CORRECTION

On Page 3 of the Sept. 2 Collegian, the K-State dance program was incorrectly referred to as a department. Dance is a program within the Department of Speech.

Achmed Valk, dance program director, was misquoted as saying his long-term goal is for the dance program to become its own college, and that his short-term goal is to deliver high-quality dance programs.

The term "college" was incorrectly used instead of "department," and the term "programs" was incorrectly used instead of "performances," respectively.

The Collegian regrets these errors.

Aircraft sale flies for country

THE ISSUE

The Bush administration has authorized the sale of up to 180 F-16 warplanes to the country of Taiwan.

In a bold foreign policy move, the Bush administration has announced it will OK the sale of up to 180 F-16 fighter jets to Taiwan. The country has been attempting to purchase the topof-the-line warplane for nearly a decade.

The F-16, a single-seat plane built by General Dynamics in Texas, is used extensively by many air forces throughout the world. Its performance, low maintenance and relatively cheap price tag of $20 million per unit makes it an attractive military purchase.

The surprise is that Bush has resisted selling the F-16 to Taiwan in order not to raise the ire of China, which considers Taiwan a breakaway province and does not formally recognize its sovereignty.

Needless to say, China and Taiwan do not maintain diplomatic relations, which has caused bitter feelings between the two nations for years.

While it's an obvious political move designed to help Bush's ebbing re-election campaign, the sale is welcome because it could save nearly 3,000 of the 5,800 jobs General Dynamics planned to cut at its Fort Worth division by 1995. Worldwide detente has contributed to sagging fighter sales, necessitating the layoffs.

The saving of these jobs is certainly needed in an economy suffering from high unemployment and weak consumer trust.

But more than that, the Bush administration has finally begun to stop pandering to the demands of China.

A 1982 agreement with China promised to limit weapons sales to Taiwan, but America has since witnessed the Tiananmen Square massacre and other atrocities. America has witnessed the heightened tensions with North and South Korea grow unchecked.

America has grown tired of listening to China make demand after demand and getting little in return.

Congratulations to Bush for making a move that has the entire country's interests in mind, despite being of a military nature.

For once, our domestic problems have been placed above the all-important mantle of foreign policy.

Campus services may mean grief

"Little did I know that my own personal jaws of hell had just opened."

buy most of my textbooks at the K-State Union Bookstore. This isn't an Lofficial endorsement or anything; it's usually just handier for me to do so, and I've never found prices to be significantly different elsewhere. The Union also sponsors programs and convenient services. So, I figure it can't hurt to spend my money there.

This semester, however, the Union's conveniences turned my book buying into an actively unpleasant experience.

My first mistake was to use a Bookstore gift certificate to purchase one of my textbooks. Gift certificates at the Bookstore are non-refundable, and they may not be redeemed for cash. That doesn't seem so strange, until you try to buy something with one. If you make a purchase that is less than the amount of the gift certificate - in my case, $25 — the cashier will warn you that you will not receive any change.

This seems curious, considering that someone has already paid $25 to get that gift certificate. The Bookstore already has the money, but they won't even give you a credit voucher for the extra amount.

But the cashiers are very nice about it. They will urge you to go back and find enough cheap items to make up the whole amount. This meant that I ended up with $5.25 worth of pens and pencils somewhat out of the spirit in which the "gift" certificate was given.

Little did I know that my own personal jaws of hell had just opened. A couple weeks after my purchase, I discovered that I really didn't need the textbook, deciding my money was better

The receipt said prominently at the bottom "GIFTC. signifying I had paid with, well, you know what. I was promptly told I could not receive cash or a credit voucher and that I could only make an immediate exchange. I was not happy. After all, they already had the money. At any rate, I went upstairs to get the textbook I wanted, which wasn't in stock. This means that I'll have to get it somewhere else, which means - you guessed it - $19.75 worth of pens, pencils and appointment books. I suppose I could have done more careful shopping, but, at this point, I figured a $25 gift was worth a good complaint.

Another annoyance came from that convenience of tantamount importance for those in range of the Derby Bakery or Quik Cats store - the Wildcat Card (WC for short). This is a declining balance account established at the Union, which you can use to acquire things in several locations on campus.

Usually, I put in about $200 at the beginning of the semester to cover my textbooks (thus avoiding long checkclearance lines) and use whatever is left over. This amounts to about $20 for discretionary spending.

This semester, I was pleasantly surprised that my textbooks cost me less than $100. Then, I realized this meant that I had more than $100 stuck in my WC. The problem with the WC is that you can't withdraw any money unless you graduate. While I will probably spend the money eventually, it's just stuck there for now. Sans eyes, sans ears, sans interest.

The moral of this story is that while the Union's services can be very convenient, they can also be a pain in the neck. As a part owner, I move that we make some changes. And if anyone wants to get me a "GIFTC," please make it at that other bookstore.

If not, I'll just deposit it in the WC.

Diversity of opinions makes page stronger

Editor,

How DARE you? I mean, honestly, what has this paper come to? I came to campus this year expecting to read the editorial page once or twice, become thoroughly disgusted and cease to read the Collegian. I was braced and ready to feel the fire of righteous indignation when my Christian faith was assaulted by writers of the Brad Seabourn/Steffany Carrel school of thought.

Now, within the first week, I reel in shock that you have hired not one, but two columnists who put their reputations on the line and defend (quite intelligently, I might add) the historical position of Christianity. Not only are the values I embrace represented, but I'm being challenged to search scripture, pray and grow to a new level of spiritual maturity

What am I to think? The next thing we know, the outpouring of the Holy Spirit we Christians have been praying for will be here in full force. Even more lost and hurting people could start turning to Christianity like never before. They might find in Jesus the same peace and freedom that I many others have discovered.

Sorry, Satan, you're losing ground fast.

On a serious note, I truly appreciate your efforts to move toward a balance of opinions and an honest, intellectual exchange of ideas. Thanks.

One final note: If all this interests you and you'd like to find out more about Jesus, try attending a meeting of Campus Crusade, Icthus, InterVarsity or one of the other Christian groups on campus. Attend a Bible teaching church, and obtain and read a Bible you can understand.

Here's to an intriguing year.

Fairness demands a response to Gregory Hill's liberal attacks on the Collegian staff and on Democrats. (Letter, Sept. 1) He gives the blanket label of liberal to all Collegian staff members and lays blanket blame for the nation's problems on liberals.

I know the members of the Collegian staff. Some are Some liberals. conservatives. Most are moderates. They are a crosssection of all the students I have known during my 12 years at K-State.

▶ STUDENT SENATE

Senate should watch its own restrictions

As a former student senator, I would like to add my voice to that of Kelly Klawonn's in declaring that student fees should not be used to finance Senate's retreat.

I was on last year's Senate Finance Committee that did not recommend funding the retreat, in which $3,069 was requested. Besides feeling that this amount was an extravagant sum to spend, we also based our decision on past Student Senate legislation. Section 3 of Bill 81/82/7, titled "Organization and Funding of Student Senate Retreats," says, "Be it enacted that (a) statement be placed on Student Senate Election Filing Forms stating that a mandatory Student Senate Retreat will be held and each Senator and other student participants will be expected to bear the individual costs of the Retreat." Bill 81/82/7 is still in effect, even though $595 is much less than $3,069. If Senate gives itself the $595 Thursday night, not only will they be padding their pockets with student fees, but they will also be breaking their own rules.

Senate should be held accountable for its constituents. If enough students contact their senators, phone or visit the Student Governing Association office in the Union, or go to the Senate meetings at 7 p.m. in the Union Big 8 Room to protest against the financing of the retreat, the $595 allocation will almost assuredly be defeated. Let's all let Senate know that OUR money does not necessarily mean THEIR money.

Western Kansas drought still affects Hays' wells

City looks for alternatives despite above-average rainfall throughout the year

DEBORAH WHITSON

Most any Kansas resident knows the excess of green in the landscape these days is the exception, not the Heavy rainfall over the summer has given residents a break from the usual dry, brown vegetation and dust storms of early fall.

While headlines and meteorologists throughout the state may have declared the Kansas drought officially over, some parts of it have problems too complex to be solved with a few extra inches of rain.

The Kansas Department of Health and Environment recently released a report in which Kansas counties rated the effect of the drought on their water supplies. All rated supplies the same or better, except Hays, which rated its supply

Greg Crawford, director of public information for the KDHE, said that of the 76 water supplies that have had restrictions in place since 1988, only 23 reported conditions as being better.

"Conditions that are considered to be a drought no longer exist," Crawford said. "But, there are communities that have problems meeting the needs of a really good water supply year-round."

For years, Hays has been trying to come up with an alternative source of water to replace its depleted wells, he said. There are several wells in and around the city, need to consider would be buying most of which are in danger of running dry.

The nearby Dakota Aquifer, located south of Hays, is the main alternative supply being used, said Susie Billinger, acting city

We recently drilled six wells and are looking at doing 20 more test holes," she said. "Two of the six wells are pumping right now."

Billinger said things are going quite well right now, but the situation varies from year to year, depending on the rainfall. "This has been a good year," she said.

Crawford said the city of Hays is in a bad position. The Ogallah Aquifer, which is the most abundant in the area, forms around Hays and misses it entirely.

water rights from local landowners," he said. "There are water sources available on private land, but the city would have to pay

Jack Oviatt, associate professor of geology, said that Manhattan, in contrast to Hays, has an abundant and clean water supply.

"Manhattan gets its water from the Blue River Valley aquifer," he said. "We are at the mouth of the Blue River, which is a perennially flowing river."

A perrenial river is one which flows constantly, unlike some smaller rivers, which go through dry spells. Big Blue is an alluvial aquifer, meaning it is made of river sediments that keep it full.

"The level of the river mirrors "One of the things the city would the fullness of the aquifer," he said.

Consequently, Manhattan has not had the mandatory water restrictions Hays is facing.

Billinger said the city began mandatory water restrictions in May. They have been enforced throughout the summer. She said the restrictions will be eased, if not lifted, in light of the abundant rainfall. Such laws, however, are

The basis of the restriction is that each home is allowed 100-cubicfeet water usage, with an additional 200 cubic feet per person. This includes personal use, cooking and any outdoor use, such as watering lawns and washing cars.

Billinger said the rules have been easier to enforce, because the city is giving away "low-flow" shower heads and toilets. So far, 5,000 have been given away.

Blood, sweat and lotsa pain

Snap. Crackle. Pop. OUCH!

Many of us never experience athletic-injury pain. As Americans we are becoming more physically fit, hopefully, to avoid the injury bug.

We might twist an ankle, pull a hamstring or jam a finger. But we'll likely not deal with the mother of all injuries - the dreaded tearing of the ACL, the anterior cruciate ligament. It hurts even to mention it.

With football season beginning in earnest this weekend, I find it necessary to take a moment of silence for those who have blown a knee - even the armchair QBs who lost a knee heading to the fridge.

But seriously, college and professional athletes aren't the only ones who deal with excruciating pain and the realization of such a devastating blow. This summer, I worked with a man and woman who have faced this injury. He did it playing soccer, and she was hurt playing flag football.

Their lives will never be the same. Enter Eric Gallon. Much of K-State's preseason media coverage has centered on Gallon's speedy — yet not total — recovery. Gallon's progress is a testament to both his will and the support he's receiving from others. Think of the horror he felt the instant his knee gave way. Worst of all, nobody even hit him. His cleats stuck.

Now, nearly five months after that dreadful day, Gallon is achingly close to that first carry. Just don't hurry, Eric.

When Gallon lines up for his reward, that first handoff, he deserves a standing ovation. At that moment, all of the hard work, sweat and tears will be worth the anguish. He'll have done it made it back to play the game he loves.

I salute Eric Gallon and anyone else who has ever blown a knee. Whether you've returned to play college sports, gotten paid millions to play professional sports or laced up your shoes for a pickup game, good for you. That means you've faced the endless rehab sessions and dark days of

I pray I never experience what you have.

For those of us who don't realize the true meaning of a blown knee, think about the Randall Cunninghams, Bernard Kings, Danny and Eric Gallons of this world. Ponder the reality an everyday Joe must see in the mirror. It's not his livelihood, as it is with these athletes, but he must go through the same ordeal regardless.

Next time you see a player go down and reach for a knee, imagine the worst. Put yourself in that spot. How would you deal with the adversity? Would you spend the countless hours of work and rehab just so you could play a game of basketball?

Athletes and sports in general sometimes get a bum rap — and for good reason. Often times, though, proper credit isn't given to those who recover from a serious injury and conquer

For them, it's not always just a game.

Royals bugged by Brown, insects

ASSOCIATED PRESS

KANSAS CITY, Mo. - Kevin Brown, who really bugs batters in the best of times, turned out to be nearly unhittable when hitters were coughing little insects out of their mouths.

Millions of "midges," an annoying little cousin to the housefly, swarmed Royals Stadium in the middle innings Wednesday night, chasing fans out of their seats and causing players to wonder if play would be stopped.

It wasn't, so Brown (18-8) wound up pitching the Texas Rangers to a 6-2 victory over Kansas City, while fans and players both coughed up the little under his contact lens.

"Of course it was a distraction," said Brown, who tied Jack McDowell and Jack Morris for the American League lead in total victories. "They were flying in your eyes, your ears, your mouth, everything else. You bet it was distracting.

"It's tough hitting with bugs flying around in your eyes," said Royals third baseman Gregg Jefferies.

Brian McRae, who had two of the six hits Brown allowed, swallowed a bug while running to first base. Royals outfielder Kevin Koslofski got one

"I got some in my mouth that went down my throat, man. I had never seen it that bad," McRae said.

The bugs truly emerged Wednesday night. Fans tried swatting them away, then many gave up and left. Others wrapped their faces in clothing or programs or anything that was handy. A few fans took the bugs in stride.

"After about three beers, they were kind of lumpy going down, but they weren't bad," said one man.

Brown struck out five and walked none in pitching his 10th complete game of the season. He did not have one complete game last year.

■ Brett went 2 for 4 and needs 27 hits in 30 games for 3,000.

THE FRIDGE COOLS OFF, SLIMS UP

CHICAGO (AP) William Perry finally came back to Chicago on Wednesday, a comparatively svelte "Refrigerator," hoping to plug what's been a 320pound gap in the middle of the Bears' defensive line.

Perry was the most notable holdout to reappear as the roster shuffle continued while the opening day of the NFL

The biggest addition in the NFL Wednesday - both literally and figuratively was Perry, whom the Bears finally signed after two months of bickering, as much about weight as about money.

Coach Mike Ditka wanted Perry, who finished last season at close to 400 pounds, to report at no more than 320.

Future of commissioner unclear

ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK -Baseball owners will gather Thursday afternoon at an airport hotel outside Chicago to discuss Fay Vincent, but it's still unclear if they will pressure him to quit as commissioner or attempt to fire him.

Def Leppard delivers hard-rocking performance

Def Leppard guitarist Phil Collen plays to fans during the band's performance at Bramlage Coliseum Wednesday night. Fans were kept walting more than an hour and a half past showtime because it took so long to set up the stage.

Lasers and lights go beyond average show; stage setup provides good seating

TONYA FOSTER

Everybody got rocked, despite a one hour and 45-minute delay.

The stage in the round lived up to its reputation - there was not a bad seat in the house. The new laser show was spectacular and added an exciting dimension to the whole setup.

Performing in the round not only secures fan satisfaction, but it also helps the sound. The performance sounded better than many shows.

The sound system was evenly spaced over a wide area, not just blared from each corner of the stage, which can distort the sound.

Perhaps we will see a new revolution in stage setups. The members of Def Leppard had a good idea when they incorporated the round stage. The band played a nice mixture of past and recent hits. It was good to hear all-time favorite tracks such as "Foolin" off of "Pyromania" and the title track off of the 1987 "Hysteria." In the middle of the show, Joe Elliot payed tribute to the late Stephen Clark, the band's guitarist who died in January 1991, as he introduced Vivian Campbell, formerly of Whitesnake. Campbell did a good job of executing Def Leppard's double-fisted guitar style. The collaboration between Campbell and former backup guitarist Phil Collen was truly impressive. When we were here last, we promised that it wouldn't take us four years to come back," Elliot said during the show. Sentiments like that got the crowd roaring. Def Leppard knew how to play to its fans. They like the hard-rocking beat, and Def Leppard delivered. The crowd greeted them with a standing ovation, claps

Before the show, a tarp covered the stage, keeping the audience in suspense and expectations high. That added a nice touch.

Also unique was that the band started playing before the tarp was lifted instead of the usual running onto the stage.

Enough can't be said about the laser and light show, which was truly beyond that of the average concert. It was obvious upon entering Bramlage that a lot of time and money went into this show.

Manhattan was lucky to get Def Leppard back. Although less than three-fourths of Bramlage was filled with its fans, those who went got their

OSU writers to read original literature

SCOTT OBERKROM

Well-known visiting American writers Gordon Weaver and Mark Cox will give a public reading of their work at 4 p.m. Thursday in Union 212.

Weaver serves as a professor of English at Oklahoma State University and is one of the nation's most widely published fiction writers. Some of his more popular works include a collection of short stories, "Getting Serious," and a novel, "The Eight Corners Of The World." His novel "Count A Lonely Cadence" was recently produced as the motion picture, 'Cadence."

"Weaver can be hilarious or dramatic," said Steve Heller, associate professor of English and director of the department's creative writing program.

Cox also teaches at Oklahoma State. He is best known for his book of poems, "Smoulder." His works have appeared in many journals, including American Poetry Review, Poetry Northwest, Colliope and The Indiana Review. Cox's work is also included in "New American Poets Of The 90's."

Heller said Cox will precede each work with an introduction about the inspiration for the poem. Weaver will read an original piece of fiction with little, if any, introduction.

Cox is just beginning to make his mark in the literary world, while Weaver has already established

"It will be interesting to see the difference between the established voice of the present and the voice of the future," Heller said.

The Crawl, a blues band from Dallas will be performing at 9 p.m. Thursday at Brothers Tavern in Aggieville. The Crawl, currently on tour supporting the latest of three albums - "Full Moon Over Dallas," on the Black Top recording label - will make another stop in Manhattan. Elmo and the Deadbeats will open the show.

Gary Haag, senior in human resource management and marketing, said he is excited about hearing the band's new sound, since Lee McBee took over Darrell Nulisch's place in the Crawl. Nulisch, the former lead singer of the Crawl, is now with Texas Heat.

"The switch is too cool," Haag said, who has seen both bands

McBee, formerly of McBee and Lynch and the Rhythm Kings, is accompanied by James Gitano on guitar, Rhandy Simmons on bass and Marc Wilson on drums.

"Let Me Live Again" and "She's Takin' Me to Heaven" are a couple of the new tunes from the latest album the band will perform. Songs from the Crawl's first two albums, "Raw and Ready" and "Mighty Fine Dancin'," can also be expected.

"It's a blues crossover into soul," said Mike Morgan, former guitar player and current band manager.

The Crawl has been in Manhattan two or three times, said Rick McCauley, Brothers Tavern employee.

They are great technical musicians and in the past have drawn an older student crowd, but everyone needs to come down on Sept. 3," McCauley said. "The Crawl's a dynamite southern blues band. Real good rhythm and blues."

MUSIC REVIEW

BY JIM JOHNSON

THE CRAWL — 'Full Moon Over Texas'

Van Morrison and Jimmy Buffet sing the blues on this album. Not really. However, if they ever did, it would sound like Lee McBee, the frontman for this blues quartet out of Dallas. This album provides some really rockin' blues licks that would liven up any party. If you're a fan of the blues, you might remember them as Mike Morgan and The Crawl. Morgan has now opted to handle more of the management aspects, but he still continues to do some of the

The Crawl definitely provides some foot-pounding fun on the title track as well as on "I Should've Done Better," and "My Trouble." The group also manages to provide some soulful counterpoint with ballads like "I Cried A Million Tears" and "Let Me Live Again."

This album is packed with a stinging guitar, gritty vocals and some incredibly soulful and sharp-harp licks. If you're looking for some crowd-pleasing, Texas-sized fun then pick up this album and head to the band's show tonight in Aggieville at Brothers Tavern.

Islam provides definite guidelines for all peoples to follow in all walks of life. The guidance it gives is comprehensive and includes the social, economic, political, moral and spiritual aspects of life. The Qura'n reminds man of the purpose of his life on earth, of his duties and obligations towards himself, his kith and kin, his community, his fellow human beings and his Creator. Man is given fundamental guidelines about a purposeful life and then he is left with the challenge of human existence before him do that he might put these high ideals into practice. In Islam, man's life is a wholesome, integrated unit and not a collection of fragmented, competitive parts. The scared and secular are not separate parts of man: they are united in the nature of being human.

CONCEPT OF WORSHIP

Islam does not teach or accept mere ritualism. It emphasize intention and action. To worship God is to know Him and love Him, to act upon His law in every aspect of life, to enjoin goodness and forbid wrong-doing and oppression, to practice charity and justice and to serve Him by serving mankind. The Qura'n presents this concept in the following sublime manner:

It is not righteousness that you turn your faces to the East or the West, but righteous is ho who believes in God and the Last Day and the Angels and the Book and the Prophets; and gives his wealth for love of Him to kinsfolk and to orphans and the needy and the wayfarer and to those who ask, and to set slaves free; and observes proper worship and pays the Zakah. And those who keep their treaty when they make one, and the patient in tribulation and adversity and time of stress; such are those who are sincere. Such are the God fearing (Qura'n 2:177).

ISLAM - THE SOLUTION OF MODERN PROBLEMS

The Brotherhood of Man: A major problem which modern man faces is that of racism. The materially advanced nations can send man to the moon but they cannot stop man from hating and fighting his fellow man. Islam, over the last 1400 years, has shown in practice how racism can be ended. Every year, during Hajj, the Islamic miracle of real brotherhood of all races and nations can be seen in action. The Family: The family which is the basic unit of civilization is disintegrating in all western countries. Islam's family system brings into a fine equilibrium the rights of man, wife, children and relatives. Islam nourishes human unselfishness, generosity and love in a well-organized family system. Muslim Community Association

An equivalent of $2.3 million generated from the 2 percent will be used to establish a Kansas supplement-grant program for students attending college at the six regents universities, Burris said. The remaining $500,000 will be applied to the existing state scholarship program.

"There is pressure from the Legislature for the tuition increase to be relatively high," Burris said. "By recognizing a higher tuition, we would like 2 percent of the increase to come back in the form financial assistance to help those students that need it.'

A lot can play into the difference in the college cost. Increase in tuition is a legislative issue, Foster said. Inflation, state revenue estimates and faculty salaries all can affect tuition and operational fees. Many general fees students pay are a result of student government allocations

Currently, the state pays close to 75 percent of the total college education for in-state students, Foster said. State revenue is generated by various taxes primarily income and sales tax.

"The state attempts to more closely pay the total cost of Kansas students' education," Foster said.

past now can, thanks to recent advances in contact lens design and manufacturing technology. An example of these new soft lenses is DuraSoft* OptiFit*, which correct astigmatism. Former lens wearers are invited to try these or other extremely comfortable soft contact lenses. If they don't work out, you owe nothing (except for the examination fee).

This is a Free lens trial — you pay for the lenses only if you decide to keep them after a 30-day trial period. Our office specializes in fitting former contact lens wearers, and we offer all of the newest and most advanced lens types, including soft lenses for people with astigmatism. # She thinks she makes women look bad

I feel like as a woman I am constantly being scrutinized and judged as a representative of ALL women. Thus, every time I make a mistake, I feel like I make all women look bad. What should I do? Is this an accurate perception?

A.C., K-State junior

You have made a mistake in assuming you represent all woman, yet I consider it admirable. So, not all mistakes reflect negatively. Regardless of the situation, the only person you ultimately reflect upon is yourself. Unless you have received special instructions from the whole of womanhood to act as an ambassador, then you need not Just try to remember that everyone makes mistakes, and you are going to make your share. If you never made any mistakes, you not only wouldn't be a woman, but you wouldn't be human. The worst thing about making mistakes is not learning from them.

DEAR CASSANDRA,

Why is it that ivy grows on nearly all the old campus buildings except the residence halls? Does maintenance or Housing and Dining Services cut it down?

J.H., K-State senior

DEAR J.H., I spoke with several sources responsible for maintenance at K-State. One, Tom Lee, Physical Plant supervisor, said they do not cut the ivy that grows on many of these buildings unless it is requested by one of the occupants to remove overgrowth blocking outside light. However, he is not responsible for off-campus maintenance.

I then spoke with Gene Wiley, maintenance supervisor for Housing and Dining Services, who said although his staff does take care of things like "ivy removal," they have not removed any from residence halls or any other off-campus buildings for quite a long time, with the possible exception of when Van Zile Hall was closed for renovation five or six years ago.

Apparently, the reason no ivy grows on any of the residence halls is because it simply has not found the proper biological/environmental ingredients to establish itself at any of these locations. Maybe you could ask for permission to try and grow some at your residence hall.

Art museum gets director

SHAUNA STITES

K-State's art museum now has a director, even though it is still in the planning stages.

Nelson Britt, former director of the Greenville Art Museum in Greenville, N.C., has been hired as director of the Marianna Kistler Beach Art Museum. He began work Wednesday.

"I will be directly involved with the planning process. In the next few days, I will be looking at the activities and proposals set to date," Britt said. "I will help in seeking further funds from the major contributors to the museum and in selecting the architect to design the project."

The museum will be located in the southeast corner of campus behind Higinbotham Gate. It will be constructed once all necessary funds have been raised, said Ruth Ann Wefald, art operations committee member. The project is part of the $100-million Essential Edge Campaign.

We are in the final stages of fundraising," Wefald said. "We must have $5 million before we can start ground-breaking for the museum, and $3.9 million has been raised," Wefald said.

Britt said it is difficult to say when construction will begin.

"It depends on the architecture selection process, the design requirements and the project funding," he said.

The museum should be open by late 1995 if plans go according to schedule, Britt said.

The K-State Art Collection has more than 1,000 pieces but nowhere

We have had an art collection since 1929, but there is nowhere on campus to properly display and store the art," Curator Jessica Reichman said. "We receive most of the acquisitions by gift and rely on the generosity of benefactors to donate art or money to purchase it."

The Friends of Art is a support group that helps add to the K-State art collection, she said.

"The K-State Art Collection currently is in offices on campus that offer protection and security," Wefald said.

Some of the artwork has to be kept in storage, so people never get a chance to see it, Wefald said.

We are very, very excited to finally have a place to display all the artwork in one place. Art is so important because of what it can teach us. Everyone will be blessed by the museum, especially art students. It will be a wonderful place for people to visit," she said.

The site of the museum at Manhattan and Anderson avenues was chosen because of its high visibility and accessibility to members of the community as well as students, Reichman said.

'We have an obligation to the art we have collected and to the students," Reichman said. "We have obtained many valuable Student Senate put off its decision about financing its retreat until next week.

Three hours into its meeting Thursday night, Senate moved to table debate over the movement of $595 dollars from the fiscal year 1992 budget to the 1993 budget.

"I want to let my constituents know why we want this money and why it is good," Human Ecology Sen. Doug Neuschafer said. Phil Wenta, sophomore in finance, who was just visiting the meeting, said he believed more information needed to be made available to the general student body before Senate voted.

If the bill is passed next week, the funds will be used to defray the cost of the retreat per senator. The finance committee would have to approve the

NASA design team provides robotics with human touch

Engineering students at K-State are designing human-like robots that may work in the first colonies on the moon or Mars someday.

K-State is one of 36 universities nationwide participating in programs like the NASA Human-Like Robot Design Team program, said Allen Cogley, professor of mechanical engineering.

Cogley said educational department will give K-State $20,000 each year of the three-year program.

"They are truly interested in the design education of students and they have used (student) designs in the past for practical applications," Cogley said.

Students will learn about the basics of robotics, such as dynamics, expert systems, visual sensors, kinematics and virtual reality, Cogley said.

Cogley said the core characteristics the team hopes to duplicate from humans are intelligence and mobility.

The robots will be able to gather visual and sensory data and make decisions, he said.

"It works like a human brain through a logical computer program called 'expert system control logic,'" Cogley said. "It will be knowledge-based, rather than taskbased, so it will be able to adapt and learn. It's not preprogrammed."

The robots will also mirror humans with their mobility. The dexterity of the human hand may be mimicked, since it is well-suited for intricate performance, Cogley said. The robots may also imitate other things in nature that can do work well or that are very agile, such as snakes or bugs.

Cogley said the design will create a generic robot whose size could be scaled to any job. They might be as small as a bug or larger than a human, depending on the job they are built to do, but they will always be built out of strong. lightweight materials, he said.

"This is the future," said Jeremy Whit, junior in mechanical engineering and program participant. "It's the cutting edge of technology. It's a completely new K-State has been involved in the six-year-old program for three years. This fall marks the beginning of a new three-year cycle.

Computerized test grading takes time, patience

Use a No. 2 lead pencil. Fill in the circles completely. Leave no stray marks. Do not fold the answer Then add a teaching assistant and a computer system. Wait at least 24 hours for results. That is the basic recipe for computerized grading. Jim Olson, test-scoring coordinator and programmer for Computing and Network Services, has been at the job for 10 years. During that time, he said, his worst experience was having to stand in line to use the scanner.

Olson said it only takes about a half-hour to grade the tests.

"There could be any number of reasons why it takes a while for students to get their tests back. Graders may not allot enough time, or they need to ask the professor about something," Olson said. "Or maybe they just don't feel at home on the computer, so they put it off."

Olson trains many of the assistants to use the computerized system. Each test has to go through the Optical Mark Read Scanner, which can read one test a second.

"That data is then uploaded to the mainframe, where it's put through the grader/roster program to be graded," he said.

Despite its technical nature, even the most computer-shy person can master the process in an hour, Olson said.

Sometimes Olson is hired to grade the tests himself. He charges $12.50 for every exam given, whether there are 70 or 200 tests to grade, and he does not take cash.

"That money has to come from the department budget," he said.

Most of the problems that occur are because the scanner incorrectly read something. A No. 2 lead pencil helps the scanner read a test because of the high reflectability of David Seamon, associate professor of architecture, teaches a class of almost 300 students.

'The only way to test them is to use computer grading," he said.

"The problem is that there are only 50 blanks per card. It would be much better for one card to have space for 100 or 200 questions," Seamon said.

Another problem is that some students are unfamiliar with the correct procedures. Once, Seamon said, a student put in the phone number where the ID number

IN OUR OPINION

By the Collegian Editorial Board

Gays deserve right to marry

THE ISSUE

The United States lags behind Canada in recognition of same-sex couples.

WE SUGGEST

governments in all 50 states should further recognize gay and lesbian rights by permitting same-sex couples to marry.

Our neighbors up north are paying attention. Americans should take notice of the broader recognition Canada has given to gay and lesbian

The Ontario, Canada, government received orders Tuesday to extend survivor benefits to the partners of gay and lesbian government employees.

In 1991, the Ontario provincial government extended health and dental insurance coverage to the partners of employees in same-sex relationships.

Some companies in the good ol' U.S. of A. already extend similar benefits to workers with same-sex partners.

Companies that do not extend similar benefits should. It is only fair that same-sex partners of workers be granted the same benefits as the partners of heterosexual workers.

Another human right is marriage. These rights should include the right of people in same-sex relationships to show their love for and commitment to each other by marrying.

Some cities and churches have recognized the union of homosexual couples. The question is why the governments of all 50 states don't.

Our society's definition of marriage needs a revision. Why do our laws and courts make reference to marriage as an institution for "husband" and "wife," for "man" and "woman"?

Even Webster's College Dictionary defines marriage as "the social institution under which a man and woman live as husband and wife by legal or religious commitments."

A marriage should be defined as an institution for two people who wish to live and love with commitment.

Homosexuals make up about 10 percent of the U.S. population. It's about time we grant them the same rights every heterosexual citizen has and end discrimination based on sexual orientation.

or as much as I support and defend the First Amendment guarantee for the freedom of speech, I'll also be the first to admit that there should be a few glaring exceptions.

Yelling "fire" in a crowded theater would be one. Advertising intentionally designed to be deceptive would be another.

As rational as maintaining truth in advertising may seem, there are a number of businesses and nonprofit organizations content with knowingly and willingly misleading the public. At the forefront of the deception campaign are antiabortion counseling services, disguised as impartial health-care providers within their own

Review fell short of correct music savvy

Editor,

The next time you send someone to review a concert, send someone who knows what he or she's talking about. Granted, Tonya Foster did sugarcoat the Def Leppard show pretty well, but she left much to be desired.

She obviously is not familiar with the band, and I would venture to guess that this was the first Leppard show she's been to. If she had bothered to catch the "Hysteria" tour, she would have noticed that 1) the stage was covered, and 2) they started playing before it was unveiled. Exactly the same as before - same Clint Eastwood vocal, same "Stagefright" opening song, and no running onto the stage since the "Rock 'Til You Drop" tour.

Ms. Foster also highlighted the laser light show. Yes, it was quite good. It was a "nice" compliment to the stage and the music. Leppard presented no "special" special effects. They let their music do it all by playing two full hours of their

They dipped heavily into their "Pyromania" and "Hysteria" albums, half of "Adrenalize" and an acoustic set with lead singer Joe Elliot on vocals and bassist Rick Savage on guitar. Leppard also busted out several extended versions, like "Rocket," in which Elliot ventured into a little Led Zeppelin. I guess maybe she didn't recognize it.

There were some rumors of the entire show, being prerecorded. Well, it was pretty damn hard to tell. And even if it was and they have become a studio band, it doesn't matter. I'd even go so far as to say that they jammed on a few songs. They put on a helluva show.

I could go on and on about being a hardcore Leppard fan and lover of diverse music, but the bottom line is this: The girl's review was lame! If you get the chance, go check them out. It's well worth it.

POLITICS The battle continues among left and right

This letter is in reference to Mark Engler's column on conservatism not being for the common good. I don't consider myself an extreme right-winger but a conservative with some common sense.

I agree with progressive ideas such as President Bush's GI bill for kids (otherwise known as a voucher system), in which parents would get financial vouchers to send their children to any public or private high school they desire.

On the subject of "tolerance and understanding" for liberal thinking, do you believe the predominantly liberal mindset in Congress helped foster fiscal responsibility among our elected representatives with respect to our national budget, past and current deficits, and debt?

Did this philosophy help Congressmen and -women run the House of Representative Post Office and House Bank allowing soundly, representatives to get interestfree loans on taxpayers' money, no matter how much they overdrew their accounts?

Contrary to Engler's theme that the conservative movement is a bunch of right-wing Bible thumpers sending this country to hell in a handbasket, I'd like to bring out a few points.

Has the philosophy of embracing homosexuality as an 'alternative lifestyle" really been good for America? This group of people has been mainly responsible in the United States for starting the spread of the Black Plague of the 20th century: AIDS.

Also, since illegal drug use is also considered just another way of life, liberals say: "Hey, man! Get with it! Everybody's doing it; a little bit won't hurt, and it's just like having a beer!" But how many millions of dollars are spent in this country on drug-rehabilitation centers, and how many lives and families have been wasted on this lifestyle choice? Wouldn't these two items come under the heading of social and economic decay?

In addition, it's ironic that today's conservatives are in favor of the voucher system I mentioned before and liberals are against it. They are content to maintain the status quo in education and also maintain, as Engler would say, "educational decay"in the U.S. I'd also like to point out that Engler didn't say, or have the guts to say, what he thought about today's hardcore disenchanted, conservatives who sought to seek refuge in "the logic of racist and hayseed religious leaders." He hid behind Bill Buckley's quote to make his

There's beauty in real groceries

Twas raised by lively, well-fed Germans and preparing and eating food. At my grandmother's house, Sunday dinner was a religious experience in itself.

A recent trip to the grocery store made me nostalgic for the good old days - the days when most of the vegetables we ate came from the family farm or this hippie co-op my mom joined in the 1970s. You knew where your food had come from, and there was no worry about chemical additives or cancer-causing

Except for a few weeks in the midst of bathing-suit season, we hardly ever thought about calories.

But those days are long gone. Cruising through the produce department with a friend one Friday night, I realized what a postmodern hell grocery shopping had become. Between worrying about price, health concerns or political implications of our choices, food has ceased to be fun.

First, we were attracted to a large display of grapes. My companion started to fondle the fruit and was about to toss a bag into her cart. 'You're not going to buy grapes," I said a little too loudly. "Haven't you ever heard of Cesar Chavez? "Are you still boycotting these things?" she responded. "It's not just a union fight. Now you've got to worry about all the chemicals they spray on the fruit. The workers are dying from cancer because of exposure to the pesticides," I explained. "I'm not taking any chances."

Another gentleman joined our conversation, Italians who took great pleasure in explaining that this year's concern about grapes involved the exploitation of South American workers, as well. Leaving the grapes behind, we then debated the merits and hazards of avocados, red bell peppers, oranges and bananas. I was a little concerned about the price of asparagus, but knew I would not be able to persuade my friend from passing by her favorite vegetable.

Even if I had said, 'Hey, I heard they had an Elvis sighting here yesterday. He was spotted relieving himself right here on that big mound of asparagus," she would still have put a couple of bundles of it in her

We limped through the store, agonizing over low-fat, low-sodium, meatless, healthconscious choices and ran into a friend in the frozen-food section. Her basket was filled with microwave dinners — even breakfasts — and a big, five-gallon container of ice cream. After admonishing her for the less-than-healthy state of her grocery cart, we eyed her ice cream

"It's good and cheap," she announced. Even understanding that we all had busy schedules, we still pressed on about the frozen dinners.

"I don't cook," she said proudly. Never? Not ever? Nothing?

What an outlaw someone is in this day and age when they simply refuse to cook. While I soak lentils for soup and make my own salsa from scratch - partly because I like to play in the kitchen, partly for the sake of economy and mainly because of my paranoia about chemicals and additives - she was brave enough not to change, not to follow culinary fashion.

Cool Cats Jazz Festival to provide musical meow mix

Cheetah Country groundbreaking to be highlight

TED KADAU

Hot jazz and cool cats come to Manhattan Monday as the Sunset Zoological Park presents the third annual Cool Cats Jazz Festival.

The music is not, however, the event's only attraction. The festival will also include activities ranging from a screening of a rare collection of jazz films by jazz historian and University of Kansas professor Dick Wright, to children's activities, including face painting and a crafts table.

and activities we will also be conducting the groundbreaking for the Steven and Migette Kaup Cheetah Country. When it is completed, the Sunset Zoo will be the only zoo in Kansas to house cheetahs," said Angela Baier, zoo marketing and development officer.

"We will also be conducting a free-jazz workshop. This workshop is for all abilities, and I feel it will be of special interest to anyone interested in music," Baier said.

The zoo originated the festival in 1990 to bring a new, more enthusiastic attitude to the park.

'We really wanted to bring a cultural aspect to the zoo, something for the community,'

"Along with the performances Baier said. "Conservation is what the festival. Attendance last year we are about," she said. "However, we are also about recreation and education. It's just our way of giving something back to the community."

This year's goal is to cover the entire genre of the jazz spectrum.

"We are really looking for a mix of styles and trying to present the full flavor of jazz. We have an excellent mix of everything, from progressive jazz to big band performers — all from a good mix of both local and national performers," said Bill McFarlin, executive director of the International Association of Jazz

Educators. "I am extremely excited about was double that of the first year, and we expect around 3,000 this year," McFarlin said.

Wildcats optimistic going into tourney, Hagemeyer says

BRIAN ANDERSON

The Wildcat volleyball team and three other squads open their seasons today at Ahearn Field House as the Stroh's/Stroh's Light-Continental Inn-Best Western Invitational takes off.

K-State starts its season tonight against the Toledo Rockets, while the Wichita State Shockers, who beat the Kansas Jayhawks on Tuesday, open the invitational against the St. Louis Billikens.

"I think that anybody can win the tournament," K-State coach Patti Hagemeyer said. "It's a matter of who can put three good matches back to back.'

Second-year coach Hagemeyer said it is important for the Wildcats to start the season successfully.

"We need to get started off right," Hagemeyer said. "There's a different challenge every year. We have a different offense and defense from a year ago.'

The Rockets will be the first team to get a look at the new and improved Wildcats. Toledo returns eight letter winners, including five starters, from the 1991 team that was 11-18. This is the second meeting between the Cats and the Rockets. K-State defeated Toledo 15-13, 15-7 and 15-12 in 1990.

The round-robin tournament continues Saturday when the Cats play the Shockers at noon and the Billikens at 8 p.m.

Wichita State finished the 1991 season at 25-13, including two wins against the Cats. The Shockers

"I'm very excited, and I can't wait to get started. I'm playing for my hometown, and that makes it much more special."

CRAIG WILSON

Craig Wilson signed a contract to play instructional league ball for the Chicago White Sox Thursday.

Wilson, who spent the summer playing baseball for the U.S. Olympic team, said the Sox contacted him two weeks ago. He will report to the instructional league team in Sarasota, Fla., in about 10 days.

"I'm very excited, and I can't wait to get started," said Wilson, who lived in Chicago for 17 years. "I'm playing for my hometown, and that makes it that much more special."

Wilson's durability is one of the reasons the White Sox were drawn to him, said Marti Wolever, White Sox Midwest scouting supervisor.

"He's a typical Chicago-type player who plays hard," Wolever said. "He's an outstanding shortstop with great skills, but he can play second and third, too."

Wilson, who took a two-week break after his stint in Barcelona, Spain, said he plans on building his strength and speed during his stay at Sarasota. He is tentatively scheduled to stay there for six weeks.

Another aspect of Wilson's game he said he will have to work on is his hitting. He finished his collegiate career with a .349 average, but this time the bats aren't aluminum.

"I'll have to learn to adjust to the wooden bat," Wilson said. "If I can do that, I'll be fine.'

Someone else who is interested in the former Wildcat's progress is baseball coach Mike Clark.

Clark, who played a key role in recruiting Wilson for K-State, said he

"It's really a neat feeling," Clark said. "When you see someone come in and get this opportunity, it feels good. And if you have any small part in that success, it's a really, really good feeling."

Wilson, who would not discuss any terms of the contract, said he is excited about the opportunity to continue his progress toward the major leagues.

Sigma Kappa ready to break ground for new house

Groundbreaking ceremonies for the Sigma Kappa sorority house will be at 2 p.m. Sept. 13, in the 1500 block of Denison Avenue.

Four speakers will address the crowd, and then they will break ground. A reception will follow in the K-State Union.

Ground preparation of the lot purchased from the KSU Foundation has already started. The Osborne Co. of Manhattan will begin digging in October. Gastinger, Rees and Walker Architects of Kansas City, Mo., designed the house.

The house should be completed in June, with before classes begin, said Lois Merriman, president of the Sigma Kappa Corp. board.

Merriman said the house, estimated to cost $800,000, will be ready for fall's rush.

The design of the two-story, 13,000-squarefoot house can be described as prairie style. The floor plan is V-shaped with a central outdoor courtyard. It will house 64 women, with two to eight women occupying each room.

Carrie Behner Rezac, an architect with the firm, said some of the design's unusual features involve an open front stairway, a second-floor lounge overlooking the foyer and a computer only decorating and landscaping left to finish room. Large columns will grace a front porch, and parking is to be confined behind the house and on the south side.

> At most Kansas universities, greek houses are built in about five years, but K-State requires them to be built within three years, said Pamela Bergsten, senior in business management and Sigma Kappa treasurer. The sorority was formally chartered Jan. 26, 1991, as K-State's 12th sorority. Currently, the Theta Tau chapter has approximately 120 members.

> Residents for the first year will be determined by a point system, Bergsten said.

The only thing you have to lose is your glasses

Many people who couldn't wear contact lenses successfully in the past now can, thanks to recent advances in contact lens design and manufacturing technology. An example of these new soft lenses is DuraSoft* OptiFit*, which correct astigmatism. Former lens wearers are invited to try these or other extremely comfortable soft contact lenses. If they don't work out, you owe nothing (except for the examination fee).

This is a Free lens trial — you pay for the lenses only if you decide to keep them after a 30-day trial period. Our office specializes in fitting former contact lens wearers, and we offer all of the newest and most advanced lens types, including soft lenses for people with astigmatism. Call our Refit Program Coordinator today for more information.

IN FOCUS

Monty Chayer and Darin Scheer, intramural supervisors, lead members of the flag football officials' training class in a question-and-answer session about intramural calls Tuesday night.

Rookies, take the field

Tara Schlesener, sophomore in math education, follows the action
down the sideline during her first game as a flag football official Wednesday afternoon at the Chester E. Peters Recreation Complex.

Rookie official David Farmer, junior in business, calls a touchdown
his first intramural games
Wednesday afternoon.

S he stood on the sidelines and watched the officials do their jobs.

Tara Schlesener had an hour before she was to officiate a flag football game for the first time.

Not totally new to football, she had watched and played a lot, but that wouldn't be what she was about to do.

"Officiating is a lot different than playing. When you're playing, you want to try to get away with something, and this time we're on the other side," Schlesener said. "You've got to think like the players. What's he going to do here or there?"

Schlesener, sophomore in math education, was one of 22 students trained for the first time to officiate flag football this season. There were also 10 others retrained who have officiated at least one other season.

Veteran officials are retrained each year along with the rookies because they can always better themselves, said Steve Martini, associate director of recreational services.

"When you play, you expect to have the best official there is. And when you put that shirt on (the official's black T-shirt), and hat, and whistle, your neck is on the line, because they expect you to be the best," Martini said.

With that in mind, some rookies felt a little pressure going into their first game Wednesday night.

"I was a little apprehensive that something would happen, and I would make a mistake in a crucial part of the game and disadvantage a team," said Michael Werner, sophomore in pre-law.

But the rookies weren't alone. There were three officials assigned to each game — two rookies and one veteran. This eased the nervousness for some.

"I looked to Kevin for guidance," said Angie Stoller, freshman in graphic design. Stoller was paired with Schlesener and Kevin Olberding, junior in math education, who officiated last year. "He told us not to lose our head, and the other officials would back us up."

Olberding offered advice throughout the game to the rookies.

"Know your positioning, and make sure you know what you're calling and who it's on," he said before the game.

Later, he told them, "Don't worry. Everyone makes mistakes. It takes time to get used to it."

Officials, new and old, will have plenty of time to get used to it and make a little bit of money. More students showed up Sunday for the first day of training than in the past seven years. With about 180 teams signed up for flag football this season, 18 officials are needed every day earning $4.50 per game as first-year officials. The rate goes up 20 cents for each year of experience.

The three-day training session began with an information-packed session on rules of the game, responsibilities and qualifications for becoming an official. In about two hours, supervisors had whizzed through a 21-page rule book and handed out a test to be returned the next day.

On day two, they ran through plays on the field to practice penalty enforcement and learned football signals — more than 40 of them.

On the third day of training, students were told how they did on tests and what to expect once on the field. Emphasis was put on knowing penalty enforcement.

It took a little studying at home and a lot of work during training, but in just three days, officials had prepared themselves to begin work Wednesday.

"You had to learn it, or you'd make a fool of yourself. We had so much pressure on us. You really don't want players breathing down your back," Schlesener said. On the first day, however, the players didn't do too much of that to the referees.

They were just getting used to the rules, too.

Schlesener said she forgot some things and tried to remember everything. "I knew and tried to remember everything. "I knew my partners would help me out, and once it got going, it went really smooth."

When Schlesener, Olberding, and Stoller's game ended, they picked up the equipment as a team, looking a little relieved and not near as nervous. They had been partners for 58 minutes, and it didn't end until they went home. But it would all begin again soon.

'Basic Instinct' goes over edge

ANDY WOODWARD

Michael Douglas is one of the luckiest men in Hollywood today. He played opposite Kathleen Turner in "Romancing the Stone," and now, he is starring with Sharon

Stone in "Basic Instinct," showing this weekend at the K-State Union. "Basic Instinct" is a well thought-out suspense film. The plot centers around detective James Keam, played by Douglas, and his odd relationship with murder suspect/writer Catherine Tremmel, played by Stone.

Kearn loses his objectivity and professionalism as Tremmel leads him deep into a quagmire of mass murderers, lesbians and a dead college professor. Soon, the viewer questions what is fact and what is presupposition in the mystery. The film goes over the edge, taking everyone with it.

The film encountered some protests when it was released last spring. Director Paul Verhoeven, who directed the also violent "Robocop," was accused of portraying homosexuals in a bad light because the lesbians in the movie all appear disturbed and/or violent. Tremmel's bisexuality is a minor fact and does not play a big role in the plot. The protests make about as much sense as Romans

The strong supporting cast includes Jeanne Tripplehorn as San Francisco Police psychiatrist Elizabeth Garner. The film is also supported by an effective pendulum-like score by Jerry

Grading system not flawless

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 3 about which questions were missed the most and what the wrong answers were.

There are some teachers who do not use computerized grading, even for large classes. David Kromm, professor of geography, is one of them. He has two teaching assistants for a class of about 200.

"I have never used those tests. A few semesters ago, I asked my assistants which method of grading they preferred." Kromm said.

By the time the tests are all graded, the assistants could take the tests, Kromm said.

Student's vision of job blurred by market

How could I go about getting a job in a highly competitive market? What steps should I take? When should I begin? K.B., K-State senior

DEAR K.B.:

These are good questions, and I hope you have not waited until now to begin asking them. Ideally, this is something you should have been contemplating the second semester of your junior year.

If you have done nothing up to this point, by all means, start now. Take the time to contact the helpful people in the Career Planning and Placement Center in Holtz Hall at 532-6506.

There are a few steps I recommend that may improve your chances as a prospective employee on his or her way to fame and fortune.

First, develop a résumé that is unique but tasteful. Be creative in your choice of format and design. Employers receive hundreds of résumés every day. Make yours stand out. Second, know your prospective employers and their competition.

Finally, in a competitive job market, you must be persistent and willing to work for less than the competition. Be willing to sacrifice a few prerequisites.

Once you have established yourself as an excellent worker with lots of potential, you will have proven yourself a suitable candidate for "employee coffee-fund monitor." Then, next step - president of the company.

DEAR CASSANDRA:

Is there anything that can be done about people riding their bikes through the middle of campus and running over people when they should be obeying the rule that they have to ride in the bike lane on the street?

L.N., K-State senior

This is a nagging problem at K-State, and share your concern. Unfortunately, the KSU Police Department doesn't have the manpower to post a cycle patrol for nabbing these characters. Besides, it would be comical, to say the least.

The best that can be done at this point, short of banning bicycles altogether (which is something Student Senate may want to consider, should enough complaints materialize), is to use forums such as this column to point out to all cyclists that it is against University and city ordinances to ride a bicycle on any pedestrian path, unless designated otherwise.

K-State traffic police informed me bicyclists must follow the same traffic rules as automobiles. In the event of an accident, especially one involving a pedestrian, cyclists are under the same legal responsibility as if they had been driving automobiles. They can be ticketed, fined and jailed, just like automobile drivers. More importantly, they can be sued for any damages incurred by a pedestrian as a result of this illegal behavior - and that is enough to ruin anyone's college education.

Cassandra reserves the right to edit the content for the purpose of conserving space. Unless otherwise specified, all letters will be open to the public. Correspondence designated as "private" or "not for publication" will be maintained in the strictest

The advice presented in this column is solely the opinion of the columnist and does not reflect the opinion of the Collegian or K-State.

Adams, executive director of the local American Red Cross chapter.

"Our National Disaster Fund has been extremely low over the past six months because of the unusual number of disasters across the country the last three years.

"So, unfortunately for the victims of Hurricane Andrew, the hurricane occurred as we were in the midst of replenishing the National Disaster Fund," Adams said.

As of the end of August, the national amount collected was $12 million — from both individuals and business corporations. Of that amount, $3,500 were collected in Manhattan.

Adams said 92 cents of every donated dollar go directly to the victims, and the remaining eight cents cover operational costs.

"The people have been extremely generous," she said.

"Cash donations are also expected to help the economy of the disaster-stricken area (in addition to providing the basic necessities such as clothes, food and medication)," according to a statement from the national office of the American Red Cross.

Items such as flashlights, batteries, bottled water and blankets are supplied by corporations in liaison with the Red Cross, although smaller contributions in the form of nonperishable foods and clothing can be donated by individuals.

George Kandt, store manager of Dillons east store in Manhattan, said he welcomes contributions in the form of non-perishable food and baby supplies.

that to the fact that local zoos are getting the word out," Allen said.

"We're hoping to raise enough money to stabilize the animals and the situation there," she said. "I'm sure they could certainly find use for at least $500,000."

Sydney Butler, executive director of the association, said that Metrozoo, which attracts 650,000 visitors a year, sustained more than $50 million worth of damages.

Several rescue attempts were made in the first 24 hours after the disaster, Allen said.

An exhibit housing three koala bears collapsed, exposing the animals to the severe heat and humidity of southern Florida. The koalas also faced food shortages because the zoo's eucalyptus garden was destroyed.

A baby antelope, born during the storm, and its mother also suffered a great deal of stress.

BSU gets response from top

SHAWN BRUCE

A reallocation of money and a mandatory multicultural course for all K-State students are the highlights of the University administration's response to demands made last semester by Black Student Union.

At a meeting Friday, representatives of BSU, Native American Student Body, Asian-American Students for Intercultural Awareness and the Hispanic American Leadership Organization gathered to hear administrators present a 32-page plan of action designed to answer a May 1 memorandum from BSU.

In that memo, BSU called for action to increase African-American, Hispanic and Native-American representation among teaching faculty. It asked that 10 minority faculty be hired in tenure-track positions by fall 1993.

Also included were demands for courses in African-American, Hispanic and Native-American history that would be mandatory for all students at K-State; diversity training for all faculty, staff, administrators and Collegian staff members; and more ethnic programming on KSDB-FM 91.9.

President John Wefald said at least some of those requests are well on their way to being met by the University.

"We've spent an extraordinary amount of time on this plan of action," he said. "We have made a lot of progress, but we have a long way

To meet the BSU demand for an increase in minority faculty representation, Wefald and Provost James Coffman proposed what they call a bold and sweeping plan.

O'Dell says she backs students

Her campaign has been dubbed Gloria vs. Goliath.

Indeed up against Goliath, Gloria O'Dell, Democratic candidate for the U.S. Senate, is running a dark-horse campaign against Kansas' favorite son, Republican Sen. Bob Dole.

O'Dell, 46, promised to bring her campaign to students by visiting colleges around the state. The campaign tour brought her to K-State

Students should become involved in the political election process, O'Dell said.

"K-State students should vote for me because I offer the greatest opportunity for change," O'Dell said. "The reason why a big part of my campaign is to involve students is to provide the opportunity for them to see who they are and what they do can make a difference.

"The powers that have been in Washington, D.C., have handed K-State students a shrunken world in terms of opportunity, and in terms of good, challenging, well-paying jobs," O'Dell

WICHITA - Broken tree limbs, shattered glass and damaged buildings littered Wichita streets after a weekend storm that produced several tornadoes but no serious injuries.

"We were very lucky," said John Coslett, director of the Sedgwick County Department of Disaster Management.

At least two tornadoes that struck in and near Wichita on Saturday night damaged homes and businesses and caused power outages affecting 16,600

Wichita hospitals reported a few minor injuries, and eight homes were destroyed. Millions of dollars in lesser damage was reported across the city.

The American Red Cross estimated 333 families were affected by the storms, including 47 homes that sustained serious damage. More than 40 volunteers provided 1,180 meals to the hard-hit neighborhoods.

A spokesman for Kansas Gas & Electric Co. said Sunday afternoon that power had been restored to 14,800 people in the Wichita area after the severe thunderstorm that passed through southeast Kansas late Saturday.

Another 1,800 people were still without power Sunday afternoon, but KG&E spokesman Lyle Koerper said crews would work through the night to restore service to all customers.

The weather service received 12 reports of funnel clouds in and around Wichita between 6:48 p.m. and 8:43 p.m.

One tornado touched down in the heart of Wichita about 7 p.m. and then skipped east along its busiest thoroughfare. Other parts of the city were pounded by high winds and hail as large as baseballs.

Another twister touched down in southwest Sedgwick County, and straightline winds slashed a corner of west Wichita, damaging homes, businesses and

Most of the damage in eastern Wichita was in an area containing large, old homes and car dealerships, authorities said.

Grant Davis, who owns several dealerships in the area, estimated his losses at $10 million.

At one dealership, body-shop doors were knocked out, smashed or bent. Cars were blown off lifts and dozens of others had smashed windows. A power line was draped across 23 vehicles in the parking lot. Officials said about 300 cars were

Bill Clinton, candidate

INDEPENDENCE, Mo. — Bill Clinton gave 'em hell Monday. The Republicans, that is.

Between cheers from the crowd and thunderclaps from the sky, the Democratic presidential nominee invoked the spirit of Harry S. Truman and lambasted President Bush during his campaign stop in fighting for control of the Truman

"On Labor Day in Harry Truman's hometown, it's time for Americans to reaffirm who we are," Clinton said.

"Truman's living legacy is the great American middle class.

And, Clinton said, Bush's legacy is the destruction of that class and the denial of such rights as health care and education, rights that have become privileges under 12 years of Republican administration.

Clinton said Bush's actions - or lack thereof, especially in creating new jobs - negate every Truman value he claims to embrace. Both the crowd and Clinton reiterated the famous sign Truman battle he and Bush have been kept on his Oval Office desk: "The buck stops here.'

Clinton mused that Bush has a different sign on his desk, "The blame begins here," accusing the president of blaming the country's problems on everything from Saddam Hussein to the federal reserve, but refusing to take any responsibility himself.

'The buck doesn't even slow down there," Clinton said. "Bush says that for the last four years, he's had to neglect problems here because he was busy saving the

Bone marrow drive continues at K-State

AMY WRIGHT

Collegian

K-State had two bone marrow drives last year in the hopes of saving Julie Fabrizius' life.

Although the outpouring of support did result in some matches being made, Fabrizius is still searching for her donor.

"I'm doing good, but I don't have any new changes to report," she said. "I'm still waiting for a match."

Fabrizius, who graduated from K-State in May with a bachelor's in animal sciences and industry, is with diagnosed chronic myeiogenous leukemia.

She is currently in Denver working as a horse trainer.

Fabrizius underwent a bone marrow biopsy Sept. 2 to see if the experimental drug she has been taking has had any effect. The results will take at least two weeks to return, she said.

Block & Bridle helped with last year's bone marrow drives.

In the future, however, club members have decided to take a backseat, said Brian Dunn, senior in animal sciences and industry and Block & Bridle president.

"The drives drained us financially," Dunn said.

But that doesn't mean they are backing out completely, he said.

"We are still interested in helping with a fundraiser or providing help at a drive," he said. Dunn also said other community groups want to help.

Current efforts center around 27year-old Michael Meier. The former K-State student was diagnosed with leukemia five years ago after battling Hodgkin's disease

According to Robert Krause, vice president for institutional advancement, the drive will be Oct. 24 in the K-State Union Big 8 Room, sponsored by the Michael Meier Bone Marrow Fund, said Michael's father, Siegmund Meier.

Krause and Fred Thibodeau, associate director of the KSU Alumni Association, said K-State is in the preliminary stages of planning a Bone Marrow Awareness Week.

Meier said K-State's want to set a precedent by sponsoring a national week.

Until then, efforts will be continued in Manhattan.

To date, $35,000 has been raised for the Meiers' fund through various events, including a softball tournament, public and private auctions and dances. Additional efforts to help the Meier family reach its $50,000 goal are being made by groups such as the Manhattan Jaycees, Meier said.

"The drive is being done through the Heart of America of Kansas City," Meier said. "We are using $25,000 to fund the drive, which will pay for 1,000 people to be tested.'

Once the antigens of the donated blood have been tested, the typing is sent to the National Marrow Donor Program bank

"The more people we can get tested, the more we can build up the bank, and the better everyone's chances are of finding a donor," he

Fabrizius and the Meier family have become acquainted through their shared experience and keep in contact with each other, he said.

Lack of racks leaves K-State students hacked

ROY GRABER

Collegian The amount of people who ride bicycles to campus is increasing. The number of bicycle racks available is not.

Since parking spaces are limited on campus, and many students do not live within walking distance, biking is a third option. However, many bikers arrive to find only full racks.

Dwain Archer, manager of campus parking services, said one problem facing the rack issue is degree. many people do not use them properly. For instance, he said the loop-shaped racks such as the ones located in Union Plaza are made to hold one bike per loop and a total of 10 bikes. Archer said people use them for up to 20 bikes.

Daniel Borkto, graduate student in agriculture economics, said the K-State bicycle parking system was not as well developed as the system at the University of Illinois, where he recently received his bachelor's

"I'm new to campus, and overall we have a problem," said Borkto. "There's really a shortage of bicycle racks. So, you often have to chain your bike up to rails, trees or racks due to reasons other than a lack of space. Kent Iler, junior in computer engineering, said the design of certain racks, like the ones located south of Cardwell Hall, can be damaging to a bike.

"I don't like to use a lot of the bicycle racks they have because they'll scratch your paint," said Iler. "Normally I just lock it up to a lightpost or somewhere that won't

"We're tough on the safety factor," said Archer. "It is uncalled for to chain your bike to a rail. We have to be concerned with handicapped accessibility.'

Archer said he is working with campus planning services to provide locations for more racks, which he said is more difficult than

"It's not as simple as just finding a place and putting a rack there," Archer said. "You have to keep in mind things like the safety factor and campus aesthetics. We are looking for the most strategic place where one is needed."

Authorities say they suspect wrongdoing in the Aug. 21 disappearance of 19-year-old Angie Benton, a sophomore from Garnett, whom friends and family described as naive and trusting.

"She might have been a little too trusting, and that got her into deep water," said Abram, who last saw her friend the afternoon of Friday, Aug. 21.

"She said she was leaving with friends for the weekend," Abram said. Benton stuffed some clothes into a duffel bag and left, saying she would return Sunday afternoon. She didn't say where she was going or with whom.

"I wish I had asked at least one question, and that way I might have a little more information about what's going on," Abram said. "I knew Angie could take care of herself, so I didn't bother."

It was highly unusual for Benton to leave that way. Whenever she took a trip away from campus, she would call her parents and give them a number where she could be

They say Benton must take medication daily to prevent seizures that could be fatal.

Lack of humanity real disaster

THE ISSUE

Looters have made the Hurricane Andrew disaster much worse for everyone involved.

The Florida National Guard took back the mall from looters last week in the aftermath of Hurricane Andrew.

"Before we got here, it was a picnic," said Sgt. Rick Bailey, on duty at the Cutler Ridge Mall in Miami. "We can't arrest them. All we can do is stop them."

But the police did arrest them — 200 for looting in Dade County on Aug. 25 alone - all because a number of people reverted back to a kind of "no-rules," caveman mentality. Every man for himself, and to hell with your neighbor.

The National Guardsmen and reservists should be able to concentrate their efforts on rebuilding and providing food and water, not babysitting. Evidently, these looters need to be told that even during natural disasters, stealing is still dead wrong.

And due to this atrocious behavior, citizens who need help are not getting it.

People are staying in the unsanitary, dangerous wreckage to guard their smashed property and belongings. They are unable, or unwilling, to go to the tent cities set up by the military for clean and dry beds, food and water.

They are afraid. Afraid of each other, not knowing when they should be able to trust each other.

This was a natural disaster — nobody's at fault. But the unbelievably primitive backstabbing is certainly the fault of the looters. They've made a horrible situation that much

Many Floridians are in the same boat. Many are victims, yet, they victimize each other.

A tragedy that leaves 50,000 people homeless and 2 million without electricity or drinkable water should bring people together, not force them to take sides.

Dade County emergency management director Kate Hale estimated damage to the region at $20 billion, making Andrew the costliest natural disaster in U.S. history.

It cost all Floridians a lot more, however, in respect for and trust of each other as human beings.

'Test drive' may be wrong ride

remarital cohabitation is, another?" without a doubt, a very popular practice. The number of live-in couples more than tripled between 1970 and 1980.

In 1987, the U.S. Bureau of the Census released figures showing 2.3 million unmarried couples were cohabiting at that time. The number is now about 3 million.

In light of the previous generation's matrimonial mistakes, those of the new generation are apprehensive and wary of marriage.

Rather than rushing into matrimony on the flaming whims of love, large segments of this new generation are opting for what could be titled "the test drive." The test drive, as it is called, is that time when a man and a woman, already in a relationship of a romantic and sexual nature, come to the crossroads of their future together. "Where do we go from here? Do we marry, or do we not marry?" the couple asks. "How can we be sure we are meant for one convinced of their compatibility. The test drive should be all a couple requires to ensure their fate, right? Makes good sense to a lot of people. Besides, they'll know one another much better than those poor couples who don't live together before saying "I do."

However, evidence offered by the census bureau, and others, suggests that cohabiting is not such a pretty little picture.

According to the census, most cohabiting couples either break up or get married within two years, and two out of five break up within five married couples who cohabited before marriage separate or divorce within the first 10 years of marriage. Compare that to 27 percent who did not cohabit before marriage.

A study conducted by the National Bureau of Economic Research in Cambridge, Mass., indicated that couples choosing to cohabit before marrying have an 80-percent higher divorce rate than their non-cohabiting counterparts.

Another study by New Woman magazine showed that the majority of men entering such arrangements have no intention to marry the woman with whom they reside.

The same study also showed the "bliss" level of relationship satisfaction to be the same or worse in a great many cohabiting relationships.

The communication and consideration patterns were similar to those of "bad" marriages.

Such information calls into serious question the actual effectiveness of this extended courtship period as a means of hat ails marriage

Ironically, couples choosing cohabitation before marriage are very likely to run into the same disasters that scathe many marriages.

In fact, a separation for cohabitants may bring the same painful effects experienced in a divorce. The legal aspect can be much more difficult in the final analysis of "who gets what," because the couple is technically

In the end, we may find that cohabiting actually did much more to add casualty to the soaring divorce rate than it did to heal it.

Collegian needs to bring back chronicle

Editor,

I am writing to you concerning the discontinuation of "One Day to Live."

In the Sept. 3 Collegian, a small note was printed stating the reason for discontinuing this story. The reason stated was that some readers were finding the soap opera parody offensive.

On behalf of those readers who did enjoy it, I am asking you to please start printing the parody once again. I would also like to suggest to those readers who found it offensive not to read it and let those who found it enjoyable be able to enjoy it

Writer defends, explains her work

Editor,

First of all, I would like to thank the people at the Collegian for the opportunity to run my soap opera. And I would also like to express my gratitude for being given space to express my thoughts.

I'm not going to throw more fuel on the fire, but instead, I'm going to try and explain some of the details and similarities that seemed to have exploded in my

The title "One Day to Live" came about when a friend of mine was watching a soap opera on television. When she went to another room, I switched channels to see if she would notice. She did take notice, but it was about 10 minutes later. That gave me the idea that all soaps run together, and therefore, are hard to tell apart.

When you blend the titles of "Days of our Lives" with "One Life to Live," you get the title of

Why Moscow, you ask? Because it is easier to spell and type than some of the other names of cities. It's as simple as

It is just coincidence that I'm writing this at the same time that all the turmoil is occurring there. Imagine my dismay and shock when I read that I was "disrupting world peace and total harmony" with my soap opera. I wonder how people would feel if I were building a nuclear bomb in my basement. I guess it would be all right, as long as it was aimed at another country.

Picture, if you will, how offensive it would be if I ran the exact same story line, but instead of it taking place in Moscow, how about Walla Walla, Wash.? Instead of Sputnik and Delilah, how about Delbert and Gertrude? I bet that it wouldn't offend anyone at all, even if I kept the same title.

My apologies go out to each and every person who was offended by the story and the way it was misinterpreted. I'm not a political satirist and have never claimed to be.

I do realize, though, that there is a very fine line between political satire and international parody, and crossing over that line is just a matter of opinion.

Nobody is wrong here, and I strongly support the judgment of the Collegian and its readers to pull it.

I do thank the readers who enjoyed reading it, and if it weren't for you, then it wouldn't have lasted as long as it did. I will continue to write the soap. opera for my own personal satisfaction, and I will let anyone read it. And I will challenge them to point out where I cross over the boundaries, so to speak.

▶ BELIEFS

We must all practice religion of tolerance

Scott Spradlin hit the nail on the head with his column entitled "Pitfalls Await the Loyal Believer.'

There is indeed a war going on, and it will continue.

Just as each Christian will be called to stand up for what she or he believes in, so should we all fight for our beliefs.

When a Christian or Christian-sponsored organization seeks to practice racism, sexism, homophobia, censorship or any other form of persecution, we must all stand up and battle for our own personal beliefs.

Christianity, since its founding some 2,000 years ago, managed to wipe out all other competing religions in Europe, as well as starting wars of conquest, in the name of the Prince of Peace, in other lands.

I have no conflict with the Christians who practice a religion of peace and live their lives without trying to dictate to me how I should live. I will go to my closet and pray to the deity of my choice without hitting every unsuspecting passerby over the head with my faith.

I won't tell a woman that she has no right to control her own reproduction because my "little book" says it should be so. I won't tell a person of color that they are marked and beneath me because of a centuries-old punishment for a fabled fratricide. I won't tell a person that my god and I hate them and hope they get a horrible disease because their sexual orientation is not the same as mine.

I will instead try to see the good in each person and the beauty of a world filled with diversity. Obviously, there are many who use the name of Jesus to further their own brand of intolerance and decadence. I applaud the Christian who is loving and tolerant and follows the way of a peaceful Messiah. To the other so-called "Christians," I hope you never Jesus freaks. Bible-bangers. Holy rollers. God squad.

These are just a few of the terms I've heard students use to describe Christians at K-State.

Curiously, if students or faculty used similar stereotypical language to describe other religions, races or ethnic groups, they would be nailed to the wall by champions of diversity.

In fact, Christians are probably the most stereotyped group in the country. For example, Hollywood portrays Christians only as priests or televangelists.

The root of all stereotypes is ignorance. The level of ignorance at K-State toward Christians and the Bible is alarming.

Likewise, a person does not become an expert on Christianity after reading the Bible once, or even twice. I've read the Bible, too most parts many times. I've also studied and even taught the Bible regularly for the last six years. Yet, I would certainly not consider myself to be an expert on Christianity. The more I learn, the more I realize there is to learn. The questions and criticisms I've heard about the Bible frequently display a lack of basic knowledge. The Bible doesn't condone violence, pornography and sexism. A four-year-old could refute such arguments. Critics often raise questions that are based on a superficial study of the Bible that can easily be answered after further investigation.

I frequently hear people say the Bible contradicts itself. A small amount of research change in people.

can quickly resolve most of those questions.

Sometimes, passages appear to be contradictory, because the translations of some words from Hebrew and Greek into English aren't perfect. Thus, the same word found in two verses may cause other when the actual meaning of the word in the original text is quite different. The apparent contradiction resolved. An example is the verb "to hear" found the reader to believe the verses contradict each in Acts 9:7 and Acts 22:9 from the King James Version of the Interestingly, I don't HART arguments hear disputing the fact that biblical prophecies have come true. Nor do I hear people discuss the fact that Christ's miracles weren't questioned by his contemporary critics. Eyewitness accounts of his miracles were

JOHN

Also, critics often ignore the enormous amount of archeological evidence that supports the Bible. I've seen many lives transformed for the better through the teachings of Christianity. The teachings of critics will never produce that type of positive from the dead. Investigate that claim. While researching a book attempting to refute the resurrection of Christ, journalist

Frank Morrison became a Christian. The truth of the resurrection gives Christianity more authority than any other institution in the history of the world.

Unfortunately, there are hundreds of other arguments I don't have room to address here. I'm glad people are interested in the Bible. Nevertheless, if you are really concerned with what's true, then you have no other choice but to investigate the Bible and its claims thoroughly and objectively. Don't look for your answers in people who agree with you or who originally brought biblical criticisms to your attention. A man named C.S. Lewis used this approach and went on to become one of the most prolific Christian writers of the 20th century. Don't be afraid of becoming the next C.S.

If you aren't concerned with what's true, and you won't objectively investigate the Bible, then your arguments should be revealed for what they are - smoke screens and arrogant attacks that blatantly distort the facts. Arguments built on ignorance deserve to be voiced, but they don't deserve to be heard. Personal beliefs and opinions are important, but the truth is precious.

New brew 'eyes' Manhattan for test marketing

Collegian

There's a new beer catching eyes

Pig's Eye Pilsner, a product of the Minnesota Brewing Co., has been appearing on the shelves of local liquor stores in an effort to test the market.

Pat Zettel, brewery marketing director, said Manhattan is an ideal testing ground.

"You've got both a military base and a university there," he said. "Those are good demographics for beer drinkers.

Zettel said that since his company began brewing Pig's Eye May 14, it's been "one of the hottest brands" in Minnesota. Since then, the beer has been introduced to a handful of locations, including Milwaukee and Rockford, Ill.

The beer was introduced to the Manhattan area about three weeks ago, said Gordy Kaylor, Heartland Beverages president. Although Pig's Eye doesn't have the ability to compete with other beers in terms of advertising, Zellet said, the beer has sold well because of word-of-mouth.

"The sales have literally blown our expectations," he said. Kaylor, who describes Pig's Eye as "a kind of renegade," said much of the beer's appeal lies in its legend and the face that graces its Zettel said the beer derives its name from Pierre "Pig's Eye" Parrant, an 1830s Minnesotan pioneer and bootlegger.

Parrant, who acquired his nickname after losing an eye in a fight, was St. Paul's first settler and ran whiskey from a cave there.

Although Parrant's portrait on the label might look like a character out of Silver Dollar City, Kaylor said, the real Parrant was a bit

"To be honest, this guy on the box looks good," Kaylor said. "The real one looked like he'd kill your mother.'

Other characters featured by the beer are the members of the Pig's are plans to call the light "Pig's Eye Eye bikini team.

Zettel said after Stroh's Brewing Co. faced a sexual harassment suit as a result of its Old Milwaukee Swedish bikini team, Pig's Eye decided to form its own tongue-incheek team.

"We thought that instead of using blonde bimbos, which was what they were doing, we'd use piglets," he said.

Accompanying the team on posters is a slogan slightly reminiscent of "Deliverance" -"Swill it down- and squeal with

The humor in advertising doesn't end there, though. Kaylor said there

But Kaylor said he is quick to point out that not everything in the beer merits humor. "A lot of people might buy the can for a collection," he said, "but the beer isn't a joke."

In fact, Zettel said, the beer's water source is a 1,100-foot artesian well located in Parrant's old cave. He said researchers have dated the well as being 37,000 years old, and it's one of the deepest in North

"The water is absolutely virginpure," Zettel said. "We don't get our water from Lake Michigan like some other breweries do."

Zettel said the environment is another thing the brewery takes seriously. Instead of fiberboard, Pig's Eye uses recyclable cardboard

Devon Turley, sales clerk at Rickels Retail Liquor, said although kegs of Pig's Eye aren't yet available, cases have been selling

"At first, I thought it would just be Fort Riley soldiers, but a lot of students have tried it since they've come back," he said. "In the first few days, we sold eight to 10 cases.

Zettel said orders for Pig's Eye have been coming from Russia. China and Taiwan.

New team ready for surprises

The new volleyball season just started this weekend, but it didn't take a long time to predict another losing year for the squad of second-year coach Patti Hagemeyer.

It also didn't take long to see that this team is not the same as last year's.

The spikers, young and inexperienced, probably will fight with Missouri for the not-tobe-last honor in the Big Eight Conference. A winning record, or even an appearance at the conference tourney of the four best Big Eight teams, will be a goal that is awfully high.

Nobody expects a top-four appearance or an above .500 season finish. But this team is ready to surprise. It has potential for some upsets. There are many indications that this team is better than last year's.

· Hagemeyer is a coach who has a lot of confidence in the team, particularly the newcomers. Starting with four freshmen — leaving last season's team leader in hitting percentage, Angie McKee, and the school's third best single season setter, Wendy Garrett, on the bench — tells you the whole story.

· Kathy Saxton good; K-State good. Saxton not so good; K-State bad.

KLEEMANN

Right now, Saxton is the dominant player on the court. If she has a good day, the entire team builds on her. If she doesn't have a good day, as against-Wichita State this weekend, the rest of the Cats lose their momentum. Saxton needs someone to step up next to her.

Suzanne Hagge, 18-year-old freshman middle blocker, would be the first candidate.

After being in Saxton's shadow in the opening match, Hagge stepped up to be the team leader in digs against Wichita State.

A day later, Hagge played with even more confidence, co-leading K-State's offense with Saxton in the first game against St. Louis. Not everything was perfect, but Hagge, who is dead serious when she says the team hopes to go to the Big Eight tourney, took a shot of responsibility by demanding more balls.

· Watch freshman Chi Dau, a 5-foot-6-inch setter who can kill balls if nobody else does.

Dau, who missed a school record in a threegame match by only two assists against St. Louis, started in all four matches and showed understanding between her and the outside hitters, especially Saxton.

· Jill Dugan, another freshman, is the main reason behind an improved blocking game. Dugan was the team leader in blocking in all four matches this weekend. Besides her blocking ability, the 6-foot spiker is also a threat offensively, attacking through the middle.

Altogether, the members of Hagemeyer's recruiting class are better than many have

The purpose this season is to gain experience. Nothing else. Next season, which will most likely include three seniors, a junior and six sophomores, is a different story.

Saxton sets 2 records in tournament

The K-State volleyball team had good news and not-so-good news this weekend.

Following the Stroh's/Stroh's Light-Continental Inn-Best Western Invitational, the good news was that the squad evened its record at 2-2 Sunday by beating the Akron Lady Zips in four games, 15-11, 15-7, 11-15 and 15-10.

The not-so-good news was that the squad finished third behind Wichita State and Toledo in the weekend tourney at Ahearn Field House.

But K-State coach Patti Hagemeyer said she looks toward the positive side.

"We decided not to be down," Hagemeyer said after the first win against St. Louis Saturday. "Our hitting came back, and we gained some confidence and did not worry about

K-State got its first win in the season with a straight 3-0 win against the St. Louis Billikens after losing to Toledo Friday 3-1 and to Wichita State in three games Saturday afternoon.

In the tournament opener against Toledo, Kathy Saxton broke two K-State records when she had 35 kills and 77 attacks for the four-game match.

Saxton, this season's lone senior, improved Shawnee Call's and Julie James's old mark by 10 kills, and she had 17 attacks more than Mary Kinsey did against Oklahoma in 1988.

Toledo and K-State traded points in the first game until Stephanie Liester's kill gave K-State an 11-9 lead. But the Rockets scored the next 6 points to take

The Cats roared back to lead 4-1 with four Saxton kills and stretched the lead to 9-4. Before Toledo could tie the game at 9, the Cats took command again to even the match on Suzanne Hagge's kill.

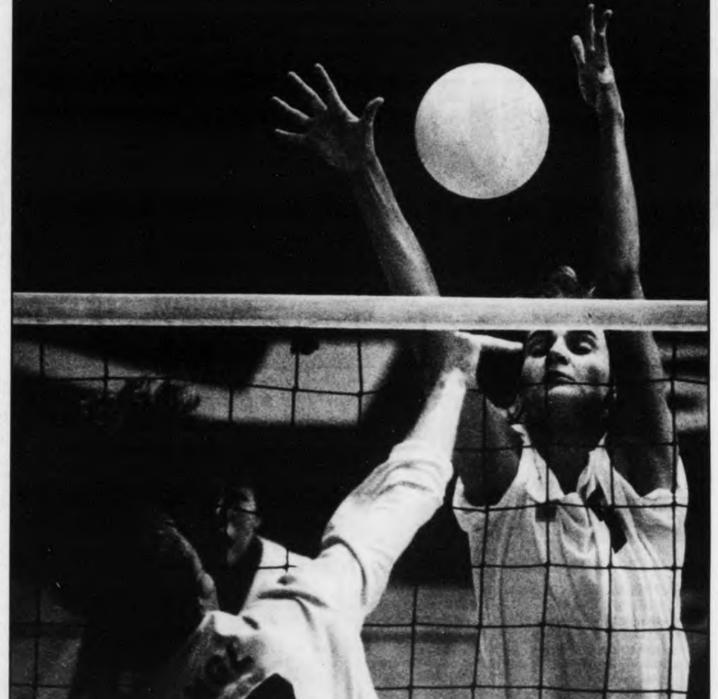

In the next game, the spikers built early 6-2 lead on another Saxton kill. The Rockets fired back and used a 9-3 stretch to close the third set 15-12.

The Rockets never trailed in game four and won the match 15-7.

During the spikers' second contest, the Wichita State Shockers were in control of the Cats, never trailing in the three-game match. The closest K-State got was during the first game as the Cats rallied from a 6-point deficit to 11-12. Wichita State shut out K-State for the rest of the game to win 15-11.

Everything ran smoothly in the second game for the Shockers as they overpowered the Cats 15-2. K-State didn't even score until the Shockers had Wichita State gained leads of 7-2 and 11-6 in the third game before closing the match 15-10.

Jill Dugan, Wildcat middle blocker, goes up for a block attempt against Crista Kungl of the Akron Lady Zips. The Cats won three of four games in their Sunday contest against the Lady Zips, 15-11, 15-7, 11-15 and 15-10.

After a five-hour rest, K-State came to a quick 4-1 lead against St. Louis. The spikers jumped with 6 unanswered points to win the opening game 15-9. In game two, the spikers outbattled their opponent with a better offensive line to take the

The Billikens took a 2-0 lead in game three. The Cats turned the game around to gain a 13-4 lead. The Cats went on to win 15-7.

Freshman Chi Dau came within two assists of tying a K-State record in a three-game match. Dau finished with 41 assists, two short of Alison Murphy's 43

"I was pleased of how they bounced back and forgot the past challenges,' Hagemeyer said. "They started concentrating on their passing and

In Sunday's match, Akron spurted to a 6-0 lead in the first game. The Cats fought back to tie at 9. Kathy Saxton's kill got K-State a 10-9 lead, and three Cat blocks brought the score to 15-9.

The second set followed the first in the same way - an early Akron lead and a K-State turnaround.

Roles were switched in the third set when K-State took a 8-3 lead, and Akron took control of the game after Hagemeyer gave some substitutes playing time. Akron used that weakness to pull out a 15-11 set win.

In the final game, K-State's starting lineup came back on court and saved the match in four sets.

Commissioner ends own reign

■ Fay Vincent ended his controversial threeyear tenure Monday by resigning.

ASSOCIATED PRESS

From the start, it was a troubled tenure for Fay Vincent.

He became baseball commissioner in a way he least wanted, taking over three years ago on Labor Day weekend after the death of his good friend, A. Bartlett Giamatti.

Monday, he left in a way he vowed he never would, resigning under pressure from the same people who

Milwaukee's Bud Selig was among the major-league owners who led the attempt to finish off Vincent. He was the same man who, at the time of Vincent's hiring, proclaimed: "We're fortunate to have an able man in our midst. He's also a fine human being."

But from the tragedy at the beginning to the turmoil at the end, Vincent never had it easy.

A month into his reign, an earthquake tore apart the 1989 World Series. There was nothing he could do about that, so he held daily news conferences by candlelight proclaiming that "our modest little game" would

Meanwhile, Vincent got the owners together, perhaps for the first and last time, to contribute more than $1 when Vincent said AL teams would

"I compliment commissioner Fay Vincent on what he's done," Yankees owner George Steinbrenner said at the time. "I think it is a magnificent

But Vincent's support began eroding even before the 1990 season began. When a 32-day lockout kept spring-training camps closed, Vincent jumped in and helped negotiate a settlement.

Fans applauded Vincent for getting involved and preserving opening day. But some hard-line owners, such as Jerry Reinsdorf of the Chicago White Sox, did not like the way Vincent played ball and started to grumble.

That was the beginning of the end,

Commissioners long before Vincent always said the job was an impossible one, having to get the owners to agree on anything. Sometimes, Vincent was caught in the middle, while other times he attacked and angered people on all receive $3 million each in expansion fees from Colorado and Florida but lose three players each. Many NL owners did not like the way Vincent ordered realignment in the NL, even though it made geographic sense, and the Chicago Cubs went to court and blocked it.

The players' union recently criticized Vincent for the way he conducted the investigation into Steve Howe's drug troubles. In turn, Vincent apologized for the way he handled tne probe.

Steinbrenner did not have anything to say about the Howe matter. But Steinbrenner was still steaming after being banned from daily control of the Yankees in an agreement he signed with Vincent in the summer of 1990.

For two years, Steinbrenner threatened and badgered Vincent. Two months ago, the commissioner announced that Steinbrenner could return next March.

That may have placated Steinbrenner for the time being, but other owners were not so satisfied with Vincent. And when the commissioner recently said he would not step aside in the upcoming labor negotiations between owners and players, many vowed to get Vincent.

▶BASKETBALL CAMPOUT RETURNS

The basketball seasonticket campout is back.

The campout flag, which signifies the beginning of the event, will be raised sometime between Wednesday and Saturday, Sept. 19.

The campout will last 48 hours for members of ICAT and 72 hours for non-ICAT students. ICAT, which stands for I Contributed a Twenty, are students who have contributed money to the Mike Ahearn Scholarship Fund, the fundraising arm of the athletic department.

A registration table will be set up outside Ahearn Field House. ICAT members can raise their tents on the west side of Ahearn, while non-ICAT students are relegated to the east side. The campout is designed for students who have already purchased season tickets Students who have already purchased their tickets but do not camp out will be assigned a reserved seat behind the campers.

Once the flag is raised, students can set up their tents and register at the table. The tent that registers first will have the first chance to purchase tickets. Each tent can have up to five students who may each purchase 20 tickets for a total of 100 tickets per tent.

Random roll calls will be conducted throughout the campout, and each tent-must have the registered number of people present.

COLORADO 37 COLORADO ST. 17

BOULDER, Colo. - Colorado quarterback Kordell Stewart, starting his first game, threw for a school-record 409 yards Saturday as No. 12 Colorado defeated Colorado State 37-17.

Stewart, a sophomore who saw action in only two games last year, connected on two first-half touchdown passes of 48 and 60 yards to give the Buffaloes a 14-10 halftime lead. For the day, Stewart was 21-for-36 with four touchdowns. His 430 yards of total offense also set a school

Colorado is 1-0 and will play at Baylor next weekend.

NEBRASKA 49 UTAH 22

LINCOLN, Neb. - Mike Grant passed for two touchdowns and ran for two more as No. 11 Nebraska opened its season with a 49-22 victory over Utah.

Nebraska built a 35-0 halftime lead over the Utes on the strength of four first-half interceptions.

The Cornhuskers had 399 yards rushing. Derek Brown, who lead the conference in rushing yards a year ago and was fifth in the nation, had 105. Calvin Jones had 92 yards in 11 runs.

Next week Nebraska (1-0) will stay home to battle Middle Tennessee State.

▶IOWA STATE 35 OHIO 9

AMES, lowa - Trailing 9-0 in the second quarter, lowa State got exactly what it needed. An electrical storm caused a 53minute delay with 12:04 left in the first quarter.

When play resumed Saturday afternoon, the Cyclones scored five unanswered touchdowns to defeat Ohio 35-9. After the delay, just before halftime, lowa State took the lead for good with a pair of 1-yard touchdown runs by quarterback Bobby Utter.

The Cyclones unveiled the wishbone attack, rushing 55 times for 284 yards.

Next week, lowa State (1-0) travels across the state to battle

►OKLAHOMA ST. 35 INDIANA ST. 3

STILLWATER, Okla. - Rafael Denson rushed for 110 yards and two touchdowns Saturday night as Oklahoma State defeated Indiana State 35-3.

The Cowboy win snapped an 11-game winless streak dating back to a 1990 victory over lowa State.

Oklahoma State rushed for four touchdowns Saturday night, one more than the Cowboys had the entire 1991 season.

The Cowboys travel to Michigan Sept. 19 to play a nationally-televised game.

KANSAS 49 OREGON ST. 20

CORVALLIS, Ore. - Kansas quarterback Chip Hilleary set a career high with 286 passing yards and scored three touchdowns as Kansas defeated Oregon 49-20.

Hilleary completed 19 of 30 passes without an interception Saturday afternoon.

For the game, Hilleary also set career highs for completions, touchdowns and total offense (347).

The victory was the most lopsided opening-game victory for Kansas since the 1968 Orange Bowl team beat Illinois by 40.

Kansas went up 7-0 when a bobbled punt resulted in a Jayhawk possession at the Oregon State 1-yard line. One minute later, Kansas struck for another touchdown when Hassan Bailey recovered a Beaver fumble inside the Oregon State 30.

The Jayhawks built a 35-7 halftime lead.

Cowboys scalp Redskins

ASSOCIATED PRESS

IRVING, Texas - The Washington Redskins may be the Super Bowl champions in 49 states. Not in Texas.

With Emmitt Smith rushing for 139 yards on 26 carries, Kelvin Martin returning a punt 79 yards for a touchdown and Troy Aikman throwing for 216 yards and a touchdown, the Dallas Cowboys established themselves as Super Bowl contenders in their own right by opening the season with a 23-10 win over the Redskins Monday

It was Dallas' third win over Washington in its last four meetings. Two of the last three losses by the Redskins, 17-2 in their march to the NFL title last season, have been to Dallas. One of those victories, 24-21 in Washington last season, ended the Redskins' 11-0 run and their bid for an unbeaten season.

This one was by far the most dominant - the Redskins didn't have a play that gained as much as a yard until a 3-yard run by Earnest Byner with 3:46 left in the first period and didn't get a first down until 1:30 into the second period.

By then Dallas was ahead 9-0 on a punt blocked out of the end zone for a safety by Issiac Holt and a 5yard TD run by Smith at the end of an 84-yard drive on the following

In fact, Washington was in the game for just 3 1/2 minutes in the second quarter, when it cut the deficit to 9-7 on a touchdown created by an interception that wouldn't have been one last year.

Replays clearly showed that Washington's Martin Mayhew dropped the ball on the play and was touched by Alvin Harper before he ran 25 yards up the field, but official review by replay has been abolished this season. Three plays after the interception, Mark Rypien hit Gary Clark with a 30yard TD pass that put the Redskins briefly back in the game.

It hardly mattered.

The Cowboys made it 16-7 with 1:02 left in the half on a 26-yard pass from Aikman to 6-foot-3 Alvin Harper, who used his height advantage to leap over 5-8 Darrell Green. The advantage was exploited by both Harper and Michael Irvin all night. The touchdown came on a drive that covered 67 yards in just 35 seconds after Mike Saxon had pinned the Redskins at their own 1 with a 54yard punt.

Then, with 6:42 left in the third quarter, Martin fielded Kelly Goodburn's punt and burst nearly untouched through a wall of Redskins and sailed 79 yards for a touchdown. It was his second punt return for a TD in the last three regular-season games - he had one for 85 yards in Philadelphia in the next-to-the last game last year.

Chip Lohmiller's 49-yard field goal 1:22 into the fourth period made it 23-10.

Rypien was 20 of 38 for 208 yards, many of them late in the game, and hardly looked the part of last year's Super Bowl MVP. He fumbled a snap and lost it and fumbled another time when he was sacked by Charles Haley, who was just obtained from San Francisco.

He also underthrew to a wideopen Art Monk on one play and overthrew to an open Ricky Sanders on another.

The crowd of 63,538 also helped.

Haley's sack came on a late snap when Rypien tried to call an automatic over the crowd noise and the safety on Washington's first possession came after losses of 14 yards in two plays in which the Redskins had trouble getting off the snap because of the noise.

Clinton spells out plan to Independence audience

A country that isn't strong at home can never be strong abroad, he said, and he promised, here, at the end of the Cold War, to do what Truman did then.

responsibility. An America strong at home," Clinton said.

Clinton also scored more Truman mileage by pointing out that the former president's first job was in Clinton's Drug Store at the north end of the square.

As people streamed toward the square, campaign staffers passed out free copies of the book Clinton wrote with his running mate, Sen. Al Gore, "Putting People First: How We Can All Change America."

Clinton told the audience the Clinton-Gore plan was spelled out there for them to see.

'Put people first - that is the economic philosophy for the 21st century," Clinton said.

The rapidly darkening skies and more frequent thunder, however, propelled Clinton through his 20minute speech a little faster than planned. About halfway through, the first raindrops doused the crowd, causing Clinton to appeal to their support of him.

"I can stay 12 more minutes if "More opportunities. More you can," he said with a chuckle. The crowd cheered, popping open umbrellas. Hillary Clinton held one over her husband.

The candidate closed the speech just as the downpour drove supporters under the awnings of the stores on the square.

"We are running on vision and hope, and we are going to do what Harry Truman did for the next 57 days: Go across the country, give them hell and make America what it ought to be again," Clinton said.

With that, the sound system burst with the jangle of John Cougar Mellencamp's song "Small Town," followed by John Lennon's "Power to the People," continuing the theme of the rock 'n' roll candidate who celebrated his nomination with a Fleetwood Mac

O'Dell said she understands students needs, because her son, Sean-Michael, is a recent K-State graduate.

O'Dell said she supports parts of Gov. Bill Clinton's education plan.

"I think there should be some national service corps, so our students are provided access to education and not overloaded with debt," O'Dell said. "I think it's terribly important that our young people are active, meaningful participants in the community." America's schools need said.

"We need to look at good, strong research and development throughout our academic system," she said. "A mandate needs to be made by the federal government that needs to be backed up by funding. Otherwise, its a hollow promise that only adds to our discouragement."

The private sector also needs to get involved in education, she said.

"We need to continue to involve the private sector in terms of retraining and education," O'Dell

FORMER CONTACT LENS WEARERS

People who have been unsuccessful with contact lenses in the past may now be able to wear soft contact lenses.

Recent advances in contact lens technology now enable us to offer a new generation of soft contact lenses that provide crisp, sharp vision and refreshing comfort. An example of these new soft contact lenses is DuraSoft" OptiFit", which correct astigmatism. Call today and you'll be able to try these or other advanced-design soft lenses for 30 days at no risk. If you're not completely satisfied with these lenses, you don't pay for them (all you pay is a modest examination fee).

For more information, please call our Refit Program Coordinator.

BSU, administration discuss demands

The administration will identify up to 20 existing instructor positions in various colleges and recruit to fill those positions with minority doctoral students who are interested in teaching. Emphasis will be placed on those of African-American, Native-American or Hispanic descent.

The administration will then fund one-fourth of the cost of those positions with the balance coming from the college itself. Each college must agree to fund the position for up to five years and also be in a position to offer a tenure-track position to the individual once the degree requirement is met.

Total cost to the administration could be as much as $140,000, with the money to be reallocated from the University's general budget. Wefald said he anticipates some complaint from those who question the wisdom of such a move in tough budget times, but he believes the majority of the K-State community will support the program.

The plan met with cautious optimism from BSU President John Kitchings.

"I think it's a fantastic plan that really meets our needs," he said. "It remains to be seen, however, how well it's going to work."

Less successful was the plan's response to the demand for mandatory multicultural classes. Wefald and Coffman said the University doesn't have the resources to do so.

"We would have to add 12 people to the history department to teach nothing but African-American history," Wefald said. "That's 60 percent of the department."

Instead, the plan suggests a more diverse approach. Students would still have to complete a course in a multicultural area but would have a wide area from which to choose.

Kitchings said he isn't happy with that.

"Nothing is impossible," he said. 'I believe that President Wefald and Provost Coffman are sincere when they say it can't be done, but there has to be a way.'

HALO President Elsa Diaz also expressed concern about bringing more diversity to all classes at K-State. She said she has had problems with professors who teach only one viewpoint.

"I feel like we're being misunderstood in the classroom,' she said. "It's my ideal that we have diversity within the whole curriculum at K-State."

Wefald said plans are under way "Efforts are being made to try and infuse diversity content

throughout the curriculum," he said. In response to the demands for ethnic music on KSDB, the plan reported that the station is now playing urban contemporary music from 11 a.m. to 1 p.m. Monday through Friday. Kitchings said he is pleased but not totally satisfied.

"We would like more," he said. Concerns about racist coverage in the Collegian have also been addressed. The Collegian has added a diversity-awareness session to its training and has also appointed a multicultural affairs reporter to increase coverage of multicultural students and events.

"We had good news on Friday," Wefald said. "The University is making good progress on each and every request."

Kitchings was more cautious.

"Although plans have been made and steps have been taken, there is still much that needs to be done." he said. "I think the meeting was a very good show of faith on the part of President Wefald that shows he's not blowing us off and is taking us

VIDEO REVIEW

BY RICHARD ANDRADE

►AMERICAN ME

The creators of this movie would have been hard-pressed to find a more suitable title.

"American Me" is an ironic label obviously juxtaposed against the film's plot about a Mexican-American caught between survival and knowing better.

Edward James Olmos plays Santana, a boy who became a man far sooner than any boy should. The movie, which is based loosely on a true story, follows Santana from his early life in the 1950s and 1960s in East Los Angeles to an untimely end on the concrete floor of a prison. In between, we are subjected to the graphic reality of prison life from prisoner sexual assaults to the cunning ways that drugs are smuggled into and distributed in a supposedly maximum-security prison.

'American Me" is brutal, shocking and sometimes sickening - all good things when it comes to an issue that most of society would rather sweep under the rug. It doesn't glorify violence but humanizes it, making it more potent.

If you want a feel-good story, rent "Stand & Deliver", where Olmos plays a dopey math teacher. If you want a story that drop-kicks the preconceived notion of happy endings in favor of grim reality, rent "American Me.

You won't be sorry, but you'll be smarter.

MAMBO KINGS

It's about time somebody came along to apologize for the horrors inflicted by "Lambada: The Forbidden Dance."

"Mambo Kings," based on the Pulitzer Prizewinning novel by Oscar Hijuelos, puts some respectability back into Latin-American dance

While "Lambada" documented the late 1980s' lusty half-baked dance that never quite caught on, "Mambo Kings" chronicles a real era, the late 1950s when mambo certainly was king, and the biggest stars of music wore ridiculously ruffled newcomer, Antonio Banderas (of Pedro Almodovar's "Tie Me Up! Tie Me Down!") put in solid, believable performances as two Cuban brothers, Cesar and Nestor, who bring their mambo to New York City in 1959.

Both Armand Assante and U.S. cinema

Once in New York, they hit it big amazingly

"Mambo Kings" is more drama than comedy. but it is entertaining throughout its 90-minute

So, put a basket of fruit on your head, throw a couple of copies of "Lambada: The Forbidden Dance" on the fire, and pay homage to the "Mambo Kings."

Reader is appalled at Cassandra's advice

DEAR CASSANDRA:

I was appalled to read the type of advice you gave S.A. "Horny and Single" in a recent column (Sept. 2).

You obviously believe whenever a man and a woman have sex, it is always the product of sly and deceitful manipulation on the part of the man. You dismiss even the remote possibility that she may have ulterior motives, that she may actually use sex to manipulate men into ill-fated relationships, or, heaven forbid, she may actually be as loose with her sexuality as he is.

You refuse to accept his claim that he did not lead her on with promises of a permanent relationship. Maybe he did; maybe he didn't. But you seem to want us to believe that whenever a man and a woman perceive an encounter differently, her perception is flawless and his is, well ... convenient.

You further state that the sex act should be considered an indication of something serious. It's true that it should, ideally, be the ultimate expression of love and commitment growing out of a stable, healthy relationship. But the reality is, for many young people, it's naturally and perhaps inevitable expression of lust and impatience.

And lastly, how dare you imply that the man deserves a kick in the groin.

Imagine yourself reading a male columnist's response to a woman who describes a virtually identical situation, except the roles are reversed. How would you feel if part of his degrading comment to her is that she deserves a good punch in the jaw for leading her partner on? Violence, after all, is NEVER friendly.

May I suggest that unless and until you learn to keep your sexist, anti-male attitudes to yourself, you should at least keep that crap out of the newspaper.

K.B., K-State graduate student

DEAR K.B.:

In all fairness, I must reserve judgment on the "female friend" until she has had a chance to present her side of the story. Your points are well-taken, and had she asked for my advice, she might have found it also not to her liking. Yet, I have to ask, who is calling whom for a more permanent and stable relationship?

As to "Horny and Single," my advice remains firm, and my evaluation that he is sly and irresponsible goes unchanged.

Anyone, male or female, who knowingly fails to communicate his or her intentions in a sexual relationship in order to achieve sexual gratification without commitment is not being honest and can therefore be labeled

If Horny and Single wants sex with no strings attached, there are plenty of inflatable dolls on the market. If he wants to take responsibility for his sexual activity, which is what women were doing long before men knew how to rub two sticks together (and it was probably a woman who showed them how to do that), then he needs to clean up his act when interacting with wome I agree that violence is not the answer to anything, and I did not mean to imply violence as a solution, but rather, that H & S's treatment of women in this manner could eventually provoke just such an unwarranted

However, only "real" men need worry about a kick to the groin. But then again, "real" men don't lay them and then leave them. We can put this issue to a vote if you like. How about it, readers, is this good advice or not?

Serbs to place arms under U.N. supervision

"We have made sure that our heavy artillery positions will be ready for U.N. supervision on Thursday, two days before the deadline."

ASSOCIATED PRESS

SARAJEVO, Bosnia-Herzegovina -Heavy machine gunfire blasted a U.N. convoy arriving from Serbia late Tuesday, killing two French peacekeepers and wounding others, U.N. officials said.

The attack on the convoy from Belgrade came near the airport where a vital airlift of humanitarian aid was suspended after an Italian aid plane was downed Thursday. Clashes have raged for days around the airstrip.

U.N. spokesman Yusuf Khalef said it was not immediately clear who fired on the convoy. However, Serb militias and Bosnian government forces have positions near the airport. At least two peacekeepers were also wounded in the attack.

Military officers, who spoke on condition of anonymity, said they thought the attack was MOMCILO deliberate because the gunfire continued for at least five minutes.

Four U.N. peacekeepers in Bosnia were killed and 46 wounded since June. Also, four Italian airmen were killed when officials said their relief plane was shot down.

Sarajevo is reeling from heavy clashes as government forces have tried to break through lines of Serbian militias encircling the city, where food and other supplies were running

A Serb official said Tuesday that Serb militiamen will have their heavy guns around Sarajevo under U.N. supervision by Thursday, two days before a deadline set by international

U.N. peacekeepers hope that monitoring Serb artillery, tanks and other heavy arms will reduce the fighting that has battered Bosnia's capital and other besieged cities for months.

But there was no immediate sign of respite for Sarajevo. The airport is a lifeline for about 380,000 people, and people scavenged streets and hillsides for food and wood.

U.N. officials said it was unlikely the airlift would resume soon because governments providing planes wanted stronger security guarantees.

Momcilo Krajinsik, head of the parliament set up by rebellious Bosnian Serbs, told the Associated Press the Serbs would beat the Saturday deadline for monitoring of their big

"We have made sure that our heavy artillery positions will be ready for U.N. supervision on Thursday, two days before the deadline," Krajisnik said in a telephone interview.

The Serbs agreed to the plan last month but so far have not implemented it.

The European Community, meanwhile, tightened its trade boycott against Yugoslavia on Tuesday with tougher rules on truck traffic through its only two remaining republics, Serbia and Montenegro.

The boycott is intended to punish Serbdominated Yugoslavia for instigating violence

At least 8,000 people, and perhaps as many as 35,000, have died since the majority Muslims and Croats voted Feb. 29 for independence over the objection of ethnic

A senior U.N. peacekeeper in Sarajevo had expressed hope that relief flights could resume to Sarajevo on Tuesday, but other U.N. and British military officials in Zagreb, Croatia, said they knew of no such plans.

In France, U.N. Secretary-General Boutros Boutros-Ghali said he would support the use of warplanes to protect relief flights.

However, Marrack Goulding, U.N. undersecretary-general for peacekeeping, told reporters in New York that no combat air patrols were planned at present.

KRISTI STEPHENSON

The Manhattan Exceptional Theatre Company will perform its final show

Sunday in Nichols Theatre.

The company has 14 mentally handicapped performers. They will perform "Christopher Columbus" at 2 and 7 p.m.

Company organizer Deb Engstrom transferred to Lawrence. She commuted to Manhattan for the twice-a-week rehearsals until Georgia Becker took over the company. Becker is leaving Manhattan, thus bringing down the company's final curtain.

"It must be your No. 1 priority, and it was Georgia's," musical director Cherie Caulley

Becker had written all the plays and musicals the group performed, designed the sets and was responsible for locating props and costumes.

"I love it," Becker said. "I wouldn't do it if I didn't."

Her involvement with the theatre began with her son. "I've been working with some group members for 25 years in one way or another because of my son, whether it be room mother, picture lady, special rodeos and nature hikes," Becker said.

Engstrom, who also worked with Special Olympics, said she had access to the kids,

Condoms sell well from machines

ANN DOOCY

Almost all the condoms have been sold that the K-State Union Vending Services put in campus vending machines less than a year ago. Vending Services Manager Bill Wisdom said 2,000 packages of condoms were bought in December, and since the installation, more than 1,800 packages have been sold.

"This is the cheapest and easiest way for us to get the condoms to the students, and it also provides a discreet purchase," Wisdom said. "The Vending Services condoms are being sold well below the average retail price. We tried to keep the price as close as possible to

A package of three condoms costs 50 cents in the vending machines. Lafene and Marlatt Hall, which sells them at the front counter rather than in machines, sell them for 10 cents apiece.

The 17 buildings around campus that carry condoms in vending machines are the Union, various academic and recreation buildings, and all residence halls except Marlatt. Most are sold at Wisdom said the campus sale of condoms was not intended to be a money maker, and the Union was not after a new market for sales.

'We didn't want to make this issue a the price Lafene Student Health Center big deal," Wisdom said. "We wanted to see if there was a need for it, and there has been, as sales indicate.'

Cindy Burke, Lafene director of health education, said the campus condom sales have the administration's support. For placement, individual departments had to give written

"This is not something the administration mandated or enforced, but they have been a very encouraging, positive influence," Burke said, "There have been very few negative comments, and the idea has been well accepted. It has been very low-key. Of the 15 buildings and seven residence halls,

States, and many dreams are about making it big.

The Small Business Development Center at K-State is part of a national network of college and university-affiliated centers that help people who have big dreams in the world of small business but no idea how or where to start.

Fred Rice, regional director of the center, defined the center's top priority as "putting dreams on the road."

Some of the center's services are business seminars and classes. confidential personal counseling and a complete and updated reference library.

Rice said it also helps aspiring small-business owners draw up proper plans, complete with monthly cash-flow projections to increase their credibility and professional standing institutions like banks.

Previously, the K-State center served 15 counties. But since interest in the center has increased in the last few years, the number of counties has been reduced to seven to improve client service.

The work of the K-State center is funded by K-State, the College of Business Administration, the Kansas Department of Commerce and the U. S. Small Business Administration.

ream-cheese donut baker backtracks for degree

Former bakery owner expands horizons at school

LINDA HARVEY

His cream-cheese donuts were legendary.

After spending 20 years building a baking business, Joel Payne decided it was time to get his doctorate in bakery science after receiving an unsolicited offer for his Lawrence bakery, Munchers.

He couldn't refuse the price. "The price wasn't the only thing involved," Payne said. "I had been involved in nightly production for about 20 years at that point. I got a good deal out of it." He was also looking for change. "More importantly, you look for change in what you do in your life," Payne said. "Had I continued with Munchers, I could evolve my job and make it somewhat different over time. But the core set of things I would be doing would be the same as long as I owned a business, change.' Payne said he returned to school for a number of reasons.

and I was ready for more change, rather than slow and gradual

"I started looking around a bit. I was interested in doing product development for a larger corporation, and I went to a convention held by the American Society of Bakery Engineers," Payne said. "I talked to quite a few companies and to K-State. In the end, for what I wanted to do, what I wanted to learn and where I wanted to go, I decided that this was probably the best program I could go into.

graduate teaching assistantship was also beneficial, Payne said.

"They kind of fleshed it out by offering me a GTA. That really kind of clinched the deal," he said. "Not that it's major money, but it gives me a chance to do a lot of things I hadn't really done before, like teaching."

Payne said he likes teaching more than he expected.

"I've taught one-on-one a lot, people who were working for me. But not in a class setting," Payne said. "I've had to learn a different kind of teaching style."

Now, he teaches laboratories in bakery production.

"It was very clear with people I was training in my shop whether they had the hang of what I was talking about or not," Payne said. "In this class, we get feedback based on written lab reports and some from what we can see in the

"But the knowledge level is so much more technical in the lab than it was in the shop setting that it's hard to know just exactly where you are," he said. "But, on the other hand, it's interesting trying to find

The bakery science department needs more people, he said.

"This department seems to suffer from invisibility. We have more jobs than we can fill," Payne said. 'We can't get enough people in here just to meet job demands. We've got to find a way to make this department more visible and the program more visible. The industry needs a lot more welltrained technical people, and we're just not getting them f 'enough."

Before coming b. to school, Payne said, he had bakeries in Atlanta and Lawrence. His biggest seller was his cream cheese donuts, something he dubs an accident.

Fake or real, IDs get underage students into local bars

Collegia May I see some identification,

As many K-State students head to the bars for a night out on the town, several are sent home for the use of false identification.

Because the legal drinking age in Kansas is 21, many local bars allow Bar & Grille. "First, we make a 18- to 20-year-olds to enter and those 21 and older to drink alcoholic beverages. A cover charge is sometimes required of those under 21.

"There are basically two reasons we charge a cover," said Sean McBride, head doorman at Kite's and secondly, a $5 cover keeps the number of minors inside down."

One minor who wished to remain anonymous said the main reasons she uses a fake or borrowed ID card is to avoid paying the cover considerably good profit from it, the bar without paying. But, once I'm inside, I don't drink," she said.

> According to Steve Edwards, a doorman at Kite's, most students who do use false IDs borrow valid driver's licenses from friends who

He said it is harder to confiscate

"I just use the ID to get inside the borrowed licenses, because they are valid.

> "The homemade IDs are usually pretty easy to see because the quality of them is so bad," Edwards

The Alcoholic Beverage Control, a state organization that controls the use of alcoholic beverages by minors, offers training to doormen and bar employees to identify fake IDs, McBride said.

The Riley County Police Department also works to lower the number of minors consuming alcoholic beverages, Sgt. Stanley Conkwright said.

Bush's balance out of kilter

THE ISSUE

President Bush has failed to give equal consideration to international crises.

WE SUGGEST

These crises must be judged for what they are, not for what political gains they may garner.

The ethnic wars that continue in the shattered remains of Yugoslavia have caught President Bush talking out of both sides of his mouth. Again.

The United States, lead by Bush, the everfearless champion of human rights, is practicing selective consistency in the area of protecting human rights in our global community. The record speaks for itself.

He supported most-favored-nation status for China in the wake of the Tiananmen Square massacre.

He assured Americans the Persian Gulf War was worth the expense in lives and money, because the United States had helped save a people from Saddam Hussein. The general public concensus was that we did it for oil interests. And if that wasn't bad enough, then we all but left the Kurds — victimized by an avenging Hussein to fend for themselves.

Helping people who are oppressed is what America is famous for doing. But, everyone discovers soon enough that's not the reason we intervene. The motive usually concerns the almighty dollar.

The United States and the United Nations have, up until now, crossed their fingers in hopes that some stern handslapping, economic sanctions and threat of military intervention would stop the They've sent humanitarian aid into the war zone, hoping to bide time.

This wait-and-see approach clearly has left enough time for any real response from the West to be too late.

Czechoslovakian President Vaclav Havel, himself a casualty of the ethnic feuding destroying his country, said during a July peace conference that, "The post-communist East ... might become a new threat, in a way more dangerous than communism was."

Bush likes to take credit, ad nauseum, for conquering communism in our world and saving the Kuwaitis during the gulf war. Yet, he is much less eager to follow up, especially during an election season.

Public outcry demanded action in Somalia, and it has started. Now Bush must either make a clear stand on Yugoslavia or subordinate himself to whatever action the United Nations deems

Our president must now make up his mind. Or perhaps he's already done that.

Looking like a winner in an election year might just be more important to him then helping out the people he pretends to defend.

READERS WRITE

CHINA AND TAIWAN

Taiwan has and will remain Chinese land

After reading "Aircraft sale flies for country" by the Collegian Editorial Board in the Sept. 3 Collegian, a concern and discomfort has risen among some Chinese students and scholars.

We do feel obligated to make a clarification on some issues mentioned in the article.

The fourth paragraph said, "Needless to say, China and Taiwan do not maintain diplomatic relations, which has caused bitter feelings between the two nations for years."

We are surprised at such a

Indeed, some people still think Taiwan is an independent country. It so happened in this country!

Anyone with some knowledge of Chinese history would recognize Taiwan as a part of China. In fact, we Chinese from both mainland and Taiwan think so, and all the countries having diplomatic relationships with China have recognized this.

Would any American admit that the Federal North and the Confederate South during the American Civil War were two nations in American history?

Another paragraph suggests that America has unwillingly but helplessly been "listening to China make demand after demand and getting little in return" in maintaining our diplomatic relationship.

Common sense dictates that any diplomatic relationship between nations must be based on mutual respect and mutual benefit, as is the very important Sino-U.S. relationship.

We recognize that America has helped China in many ways both in the past, especially during World War II, and the present. But, we know that Uncle Sam has had a lot in return from such a relationship. We must remember that former President Ronald Reagan and President George Bush are far more intelligent to profit from anything they do than we have imagined. We earnestly recommend that one should teach himself or herself a lesson and do some careful homework before making any public comments.

CORRECTION

Statistics incorrectly used to make point

Editor,

This letter is in response to Scott Spradlin's article on cohabitation.

Personal beliefs aside, we think it necessary as future social scientists to address the inferences made from the statistics he cited.

He cited statistics as evidence that, "In the end, we may find that cohabitating actually did much more to add casualty to the soaring divorce rate than it did to heal it."

However, there are two flaws in his conclusions.

First, the people who cohabitate are not necessarily representative of all couples.

Our culture dictates that, traditionally, we fall in love and get married. Those who choose not to do so may, therefore, be somehow different from the rest of the population in terms of personality or the value they place on marriage.

If you truly want to make inferences about cohabitating versus marriage, you would need to randomly sample and randomly assign couples to either get married or cohabitate. Obviously, this cannot be done for ethical reasons. Therefore, comparing divorce statistics between the two groups is inappropriate.

Second, people who enter into cohabitation may be initially less confident in their relationship than those who enter directly into marriage.

Moreover, if we take those cohabitating couples that break up before marriage into account, we may find cohabitation does more to reduce the divorce rate than increase it.

If these people had married rather than lived together, they probably would end up breaking up, increasing the divorce rate.

Given the tone of your previous articles, it appears that you selected data and drew inappropriate references that are consistent with your views. In the future, please don't mask your ideology as science.

CAMPAIGN '92

Clinton garnering support in Riley

Braving traffic, blocked-off streets, an incredible rainstorm and a crush of thousands, some 20 campus and community supporters of Arkansas Gov. Bill Clinton cheered him at his campaign stop in Independence, Mo., Monday.

As the county co-chairperson of the campaign, I want to thank those who drove Independence to see Clinton. Well, I hope some folks did actually see him. From where I stood, I could only hear him.

What we heard was a spirited address from a leader who is not afraid to take on George Bush - on any issue. Clinton pointed out that, under Bush, America has had its worst economic growth since Herbert Hoover. Clinton also noted that Bush is the president who had "The Buck Stops Here" sign removed from his Oval Office. And while Bush tries to imitate Harry Truman, Bush admits that he did vote against Truman in 1948. Students, staff and faculty should watch for KSU Young Democrat-sponsored tables in the K-State Union during the next few weeks. Materials for numerous Democratic campaigns, including Clinton's, will be available.

Anyone who wants to walk on behalf of Clinton-Gore in the Riley Fall Festival in Riley should join us. Ruth Schrum, local co-chairperson, will be leading a contingent of Clinton supporters.

We will meet in the Union parking lot at 12:15 p.m. Sept. 19. We'll then carpool to Riley and walk in the parade. Bring some pro-Clinton-Gore signs. Please join us.

As a member of Student Senate at 9:45 a.m. At 11 a.m. who attended the now-famous was Roles in SGA / retreat, and as Student Governing Association Coordinator of Finance, I feel compelled to dispel some of the misconceptions about the aforementioned retreat.

On Saturday, Aug. 29, those of us who attended the retreat packed up our sleeping bags, bug spray, paper, pens and other vital objects and met on the south side of the K-State Union at 7:15 a.m.

This in itself was no small feat on a Saturday morning following the first stress-filled week of classes.

Amendment positive step for women

KLAWONN

The misogyny explosion is upon us! With elections only months away, right-wing conservative contingency is on the attack more than partisan politics.

Specifically, Christian fundamentalist Pat Robertson is aiming his attack at Iowa. More specifically, at the state's Equal Rights Amendment.

Robertson claims that Iowa's ERA will not allow equal rights for women, but it will encourage "women to leave their husbands, kill their children, practice witchcraft, destroy capitalism and become lesbians. This year's political season has been touted as the Year of the Woman. More women ran for Congress. More women won political primaries. Robertson only proves how little society has progressed.

His assertion that the economic system will collapse if women are allowed the same rights as men is based on a male-dominant love of power and fear of women.

The economic system is set up so women are more dependent on men.

Single mothers make up the largest percentage of the poor in this country. Our present system perpetuates the myth of scarcity where jobs and women are concerned.

Token advancements of women are used as a vehicle to promote and foster a sense of optimism in the system and the potential for promotion.

In reality, the majority of women make less money and are afforded fewer job opportunities than are white Robertson's other fear is that once women are better able to support themselves, they will no longer need men in their lives. If the economic system allowed more women's jobs that paid an adequate wage, maybe some women would leave their husbands. In those cases, we must ask why they left when they could, and what made them stay before. Women trapped in violent and abusive marriages could leave their husbands and live a life without fear and danger. In these cases, the men obviously don't deserve to have a woman in their lives.

Is Robertson afraid of men being held accountable for their actions at home? Robertson does not think the ERA is about women and men having equal

In a way, he is correct. The ERA is an attempt to allow women to exist in a society - to have the same privileges and the same opportunities as men. More importantly, it allows women an opportunity to change the system, not just protect it.

Another correlation Robertson makes is that if women had a choice, they would all be lesbians. As if a strong, independent and self-sufficient woman cannot be attracted to, or

The ERA is about attaining freedom and creating an environment conducive to free and open expression. Heterosexuality is not a free choice in society. We live in a society that views heterosexuality as the only option to express oneself sexually. It is more accurate to say that one 'chooses" heterosexuality because of the benefits they receive in a homophobic society. If the amendment passes, it only will serve to propel society toward expression. Not all women will "become" lesbians, but the fear that represses many women can be eliminated and their reality freed. The ERA is about eliminating economic, legal and social barriers based on gender. It is not an anticapitalistic, sexuality altering and murder inducing piece of legislation as Robertson would have us believe.

Targeting the student population for contributions is a new idea for United Way, Isaacson

'City of Hope' realistic about social issues

Film discusses homophobia and other controversies

TED KADAU

Hollywood seems to be on a surge to push out films that take a chainsaw ride straight to the heart of our society — "New Jack City,"
"Boys 'N the Hood" and "Grand REVIEW -

Canyon" just to single out a few. Bravo. It needs to be done, and few that I've viewed do it as well as "City of Hope." Tackling every social problem from the war in Vietnam to prejudice against homosexuals, this film tackles a plethora of problems and leaves you with a gritty taste in your mouth.

Though the film encompasses several smaller stories, all in some way intertwine with the main storyline of a father and son at odds against each other.

The father, played eminently by Tony Lo Bianco, is the owner of a large construction business. He feels compelled to conduct business in the old way, dealing in government payoffs and mafia loans. His son (Vincent Spano) is appalled by his father's practices and hurls himself into a rebellious quest to find himself and battle his father's ways.

Yet the story of the traditional father and his soul-searching son is hardly the only tale or lesson here. There is also that of a young black councilman who goes against the traditional, predominately WASP system at all costs. Trying to come to the aid of the downtrodden, he is a pillar of light in a film that portrays the darkness of society.

Possibly one of the strongest, and most recurring points of "City of Hope" is in the form of a mentally destroyed homeless man who appears and disappears throughout the film. His true place in the film is not conveyed until the last scene, and it leaves you with a realization of cold irony.

For a lesson in our society's bleakness, you'd be hard pressed to find a better teacher than "City of

"City of Hope" will play at 7 and 9:30 p.m. today and Thursday in the Union Forum Hall and at 7 p.m. Friday in the Union Little Theatre.

Baseball field gets 'green' back

STEVE ROCK

Collegian During the 1992 baseball season, Wildcat coach Mike Clark threatened to pull his players from Frank Myers Field because of the poor field conditions.

His bluff has been called.

Several Manhattan residents and companies have collaborated to upgrade the field conditions. New sod has been put onto the field, and an irrigation system has been installed.

"This field has gone from the worst field in the Big Eight to one of the finest," assistant coach David Chadd said. "This year we have something to brag about. Guys are actually looking forward to playing on it.'

The improvements made were not funded by the athletic department. Instead, a group of Manhattan companies, led by Al Alspach of Master Lawn and Landscape, volunteered precious time and money to upgrade the field. Had the companies not stepped forward, it is likely that the field conditions would have stayed the

And Chadd said that bothers

"If Al hadn't come forward, this probably would not have happened," he said. "The field itself was putting a scar on the whole team. Last year was a struggle for us because of this

"Obviously, something had to be done."

The efforts of Alspach, who was working on the field with Chadd until 3:30 Saturday morning, have not gone unnoticed.

"I can't say enough for Al," Chadd said.

Key contributions were also made by Larson Construction and D & S Rental Center.

Last year's problem was poor maintenance, Athletic Director Milt Richards said. He said the field was treated as any other piece of grass on campus and that neglect was the reason for the decline.

"We simply lost the field," Richards said. "But K-State has great people, and Manhattan has great fans, and they stepped in and fixed it."

And not a minute too soon. The problem arose last year following a weekend series with the Missouri Tigers. The Cats lost three of the four games that weekend, and Clark said if he had any say in the matter, he would not return to Frank Myers Field. "That was simply a situation when the coach was very upset," Richards said. "My relationship with Mike has always been very positive."

Clark was out of town and unavailable for comment.

Cats ready to rumble

The college football season started last week. But as the rest of the country gets its 1992 season under way, the Wildcats can just sit back and watch. K-State didn't play last

The Cats won't play this weekend either. Players and coaches will have to watch teams play at least two, and in some cases three, games prior to K-State's first game Sept. 19 against Montana. "The players are eager to play," said Leon Edwards, sophomore running back, who will be playing for the first time since 1990 at Grambling. 'We're ready to show everybody that we can be contenders.'

But waiting to do that is tough for some players. "It's hard to watch the games," nose tackle Jeff is no advantage," Randolph Simoneau said. "I'm ready to get into a game.'

Another Wildcat who is ready to start playing is injured Eric Gallon.

"It's tough to watch the games go on," Gallon said. Watching Marshall Faulk, San Diego State running back and Heisman Trophy hopeful, run for more than 200 yards in a game against Southern Cal was difficult, he said.

Thomas Randolph found some positives in starting later.

"We have an advantage by practicing longer and getting to watch what the other teams do," said Randolph, the junior cornerback who is preparing himself to fill the void left by NFL draftee Rogerick Green. "It has helped me get myself into shape.

"But we're getting the same amount of practices as everybody else, so, really, there said.

Indeed, the team has had just as many practices as other "Practices have been a grind. We didn't have many two-aday practices. In the past couple of weeks, we have gone to onea-day practices," senior Brooks Barta said.

Coach Bill Snyder said he sees some positives in practicing once a day.

"I believe the players can comprehend more in one day practices than in the two-aday," he said. "The players are moving from station to station and not able to absorb what they learned in the two-a-days."

Some players avoided watching football altogether.

"I didn't watch any football games last weekend," junior Quentin Neujahr said. "Practice got out late, so I went to the Kansas City Royals game."

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (AP) - Jimmy Key broke a three-game losing streak, and Joe Carter knocked in three runs, leading the Toronto Blue Jays to a 5-0 victory over the Kansas City Royals Tuesday night.

George Brett was hitless in four trips to the plate.

THOMAS SIGNS WITH SEAHAWKS

KIRKLAND, Wash. (AP) -The Seattle Seahawks have signed veteran wide receiver Robb Thomas, waived last month by Kansas City.

Thomas played his first three NFL seasons with the Chiefs, who made him their sixth-round draft choice in

SAXTON PLAYER OF THE WEEK

Kathy Saxton of the K-State volleyball team was named the season's first Big Eight Player of the Week Tuesday after her weekend performance. In the first match at the Stroh's/Stroh's-Light Continental Inn/Best Western Invitational against Toledo, Saxton registered a school record 35 kills and 77 attacks. For her efforts in the roundrobin tournament, Saxton made the all-tournament team. This is Saxton's second Player of the Week award.

I must tell you how this

On the rod is a heavy yellow line. Temptation is to pull the fly along like a jig, but after an hour of that, there are no bites. So try waiting longer.

It goes against all troutcatching wisdom, but there are no trout here. Remember, you don't like trout anyway. Wait for the line to sink some, and since the water is real muddy, soon you won't see the line at all. This is what you

When I follow these instructions, I give the bass to Ben to clean and cook. This is important. Always have someone around who has enough nerve to eat what you catch, even if it came from a lake where people get infections.

Something about that. One other trick is to hold onto the fish after you unhook it. Listen carefully. Otherwise you will lose the fish in a foot of water.

This is an instruction I forget. I make a fist. Catch on the bank, which taste an olive, floating for all the and release is a swell idea, but it is sweller when you mean it.

Here we are, lumbering around in the water and mud, trying to grab a lost fish. No use.

Labor Day morning, 11 o'clock: A cook and a columnist try to catch, kill and eat bass. We work a murky cove just above Rocky Ford Fishing Area from after sunup until noon. It is a good fishing day - cool, cloudy.

A school of mediumsized white bass is in the cove, and we have three rods: a 9-foot, 6-weight flyrod and two spinners.

In retrospect, the spinning rods caught more bass, but the fly-rod pulled in two, plus a small channel cat (a snag through the spine).

Ben cooks up two bass good despite the lurking fear of disease. We are still kicking, though. The underwater world will not get rid of us that easy.

The fish-infested halfmile above Rocky Ford is underfished. The coves and shallows are good for a few hours' fishing, and they're merely 15 minutes away from campus.

And remember, take an undergrad fishing.

Mandela repeats call for removal of South African ruler

ASSOCIATED PRESS

BISHO, South Africa - An angry Nelson Mandela called Tuesday for the removal of the black homeland ruler whose troops killed 24 African National Congress marchers and wounded 196.

The killings Monday sparked a confrontation between black and white leaders in South Africa and dealt a severe blow to efforts to resume power-sharing talks.

South Africa controls most affairs in the homelands established under the apartheid system as separate nations for blacks - and the African National Congress and other black groups consider most homelands puppet states of Pretoria.

Hundreds of ANC members huddled around campfires in an overnight vigil at the site.

The normally quiet South Africa-Ciskei border was sealed with barbed wire and guarded by Ciskean and South African troops. It was reopened after dusk.

The killings deepened South Africa's political crisis, making it unlikely Mandela's ANC will return soon to stalled talks on giving blacks the vote and ending apartheid.

ANC leaders said President F.W. de Klerk's government was directly responsible for the killings, since they claim the government dictates

Somali 'death truck' makes grisly, sober path

BAIDOA, Somalia - Each dawn the death truck of Baidoa begins its grim rounds, belching diesel fumes as it collects the bodies of those who died in the night in this starving desert town.

The red, rusting Fiat, its front windshield missing, stopped Monday morning at a white stucco neighborhood converted into a refugee camp.

over their faces to block the sour smell of death, went into the house and loaded a shrouded corpse onto an olive-green stretcher.

They put the body on the bed of the truck and went back into the house again, and again, and again,

The men made 49 trips before Two workers, wearing scarves they were done with their gruesome task, a job that filled the back of their truck with a pile of bodies three feet high.

"I feel very sad to see this," said Helowle Aden Kasin, a sturdy exfarmer who has been loading the corpses for weeks.

A.C., K-State student

I checked with Sally Sowell, student health administrative officer, and she said appointments by phone or in person are encouraged. You will be scheduled with the first available doctor.

However, to see a specific doctor, you MUST make an appointment. Walk-ins are for urgent care only. You can ask for Lafene's pamphlet that describes the difference between urgent and routine healthcare situations Sowell said Lafene hopes to increase the number of appointment slots available next year to decrease the overall waiting time for an individual appointment.

Cardwell Hall namesake dies at 89

TED KADAU

Cardwell Hall's namesake, Alvin Boyd (A. B.) Cardwell, 89, died Tuesday in Kingston, Cardwell was a K-State administrator, researcher, as well as professor for more than 30 years.

Remaining at K-State until possibly remembered most for his great contributions to the K-State physics department and the University as a whole. "I think he would like to be remembered for helping to lay the foundation for a world-class physics department, as well as helping to put into motion an excellent physics facility, that was built at just under $20 a square foot. This is an incredibly economical figure for a facility such as we have," said James Legg, head of the physics department.

Joining the physics faculty in 1936, Cardwell quickly rose through the ranks to become physics department head in 1937. He was then promoted to associate dean of arts and sciences in 1953. He was forced to resign, however, after two years in the position due to health problems.

Faculty honored him as one of the University's outstanding professors in 1957. In that same year, he was redrafted as department head and served until 1967. It was also during this period that he supervised the planning of the physical science building that now bears

The building was dedicated to Cardwell for two reasons,

"Along with the fact that Cardwell helped to build the facility, the name is also in recognition of his vast contributions to K-State," he said. "It is very rare for a building to be named after an individual who is neither a past University president, or someone who has contributed

U.S. hunger up 50 percent

ASSOCIATED PRESS

BOSTON - About 30 million Americans who are poor or struggling to get by fail to eat enough, as hunger spreads beyond inner cities to the heartland, a report says.

The research, prepared at the request of U.S. Rep. Tony Hall, D-Ohio, chairman of the House Select Committee on Hunger, estimates hunger has grown by 50 percent since the mid-1980s.

"When we see increasing poverty and decreasing incomes, it's not at all surprising that hunger has increased," said Larry Brown, director of Tufts University's Center on Hunger, Poverty and Nutrition Policy.

The increase in hunger also creates potential for more learning deficiencies among young children, more illness among the elderly and diminished productivity for workers, he said.

In 1985, Brown led a national task force that warned 20 million Americans suffered from hunger, defined as a condition where health is threatened because a person doesn't consume enough nutrients.

Brown said he has confidence in the updated figures because three different methods were used to calculate them, and each resulted in about 30 million. Brown said the profile of hunger has changed as the problem has grown. "The stereotype is that this is largely an inner-city and minority problem," he said. "Those stereotypes no longer hold.

"It's very dramatic to go into the Midwest and hold a malnourished child in your arms at a family farm. Hunger is in America's breadbasket.'

Dr. Stephen Berman, a pediatrics professor and director of health policy at the University of Colorado, said families at high risk for hunger are those who might have never experienced economic trouble before.

"We have a situation where you have people who are unemployed or who go from a well-paying job to a minimumpaying job," said Berman, who also served on the 1985 hunger task force sponsored by Harvard University. "It takes a while for them to understand the system to get food stamps or other supports."

Betty Khanoyan, 33, a mother of four from Clinton, Mass., said she has been helped by the federal food-supplement program for women, infants and children, known as WIC.

Her husband lost his job when his employer went bankrupt, and without the WIC payments, she would have had to cut back on formula for the youngest child, she said. Brown said the federal food-stamp program doesn't meet dietary needs and often doesn't reach eligible people.

Lisa Hoffman, a spokeswoman for the U.S. Department of Agriculture's Food and Nutrition Service, which oversees food stamps, said some poor people don't get the benefits because they fail to apply. But she added, "We think it is reaching the people who are most in

Hoffman said the program is meant to be a supplement to a diet. "It's not meant to finance the whole food income," she

Chapter activities, dedication of the officers, and communication and service programs won K-State's chapter of Golden Key National Society its eighth straight Key Chapter Award.

Golden Key is a junior and senior honorary comprised of students from every college. It has 180 chapters across the nation.

K-State was one of 20 chapters to receive the award, said adviser Willard Nelson, dean of education.

The award is given on points from activities, programs and officer commitment, said Amy Petersen, Golden Key president.

K-State had the highest points in the nation with nearly 3,000. Only 2,000 are required to receive the award, Petersen said. She attributed Golden Key's winning record to its officer-transition program and advisers Nelson and Lance Lewis.

"We have a strong chapter that carries over. We have an officer-transition program where the old officers work with the new officers," Petersen said. "Our advisers are wonderful. A lot of chapters don't have good advisers. We have about 30 active members that constantly participate. The whole thing really works."

Golden Key sponsors activities and programs for the community and University throughout the school year. Each year they honor an outstanding graduate teaching assistant, Nelson said.

"There's a traveling plaque that goes to the department who receives it. Right now it's in the Department of Economics. The teacher receives a certificate. Last year it went to Tony Barilla," Nelson said.

Golden Key also sponsors a mentor program at Wamego High School. Members pair up with Warnego students for the school year for social and personal activities. They are there as friends and for encouragement, as well as to help with homework, Nelson said.

Golden Key also sponsors orchestra concerts for the University and a Scholarship Information Day.

March moved minorities to Congress

New generation of lawmakers to reach House

ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON - Carrie Meek's primary victory in Florida this week can be traced to the bloody Selma-to-Montgomery march that forced Congress to adopt the Voting Rights Act of 1965 and open elections to millions of blacks.

Twenty-seven years later, the legacy of that landmark legislation will be the election of a record number of blacks and other minority group members to Congress, political analysts say.

Current totals of 26 blacks and 14 Hispanics in the House - none in the Senate - are likely to reach nearly 60 members, thanks to the law that outlawed poll taxes and literacy tests once used to prevent blacks from voting.

Guided by that legislation and population changes, majority black districts were drawn in Alabama, Florida, Georgia, Louisiana, Maryland, North Carolina, South Carolina, Texas and Virginia.

"It will be the most dramatic and will become the state's first increase in the number of women and minorities in the history of Congress at one time," said Rep. John Lewis, D-Ga., who endured the blows of police billy clubs on that Alabama march nearly three decades ago.

Meek will inherit one of those seats in the House.

Born to a sharecropper and the granddaughter of slaves, the 66year-old Meek defeated two other opponents Tuesday in the Democratic primary. Florida's first black, female state senator faces no Republican opposition in November black person in Congress since

Joining Meek on the likely winner's list are Sanford Bishop Jr. and Cynthia McKinney in Georgia; Eva Clayton and Melvin Watt in North Carolina; Earl Hilliard in Alabama; and Albert Wynn in Maryland.

Illinois Democrat Carol Moseley Braun stands a good chance of becoming the first black woman in the Senate.

Dairy counter offers variety of ice-cream flavors

KIRSTEN NELSON

Call Hall has been providing K-State students, faculty and the Manhattan community with dairy products since the early 1900s. "In the '50s, they did door-todoor delivery. The route was established, and they would have someone responsible for the route. We would get milk, eggs and cottage cheese three times a week," said Ed Call, professor of animal sciences and industry and Extension dairy specialist.

Call Hall was not named for him, but in spite of him, he said.

The building was named after Leland Call, dean emeritus of the College of Agriculture.

The former Department of Dairy Science opened the dairy counter in Waters Hall in 1923. It was moved to Call in 1964, said Harold Roberts, associate professor of animal sciences and industry and faculty coordinator for the dairy plant and dairy counter.

The counter serves an average of 200-300 people each day. More than half of them are students, and the rest are faculty and staff, said Linda Kleiner, senior in animal sciences and industry and supervisor of the counter.

Student customers said they like to patronize the dairy counter.

"I like to go to Call Hall, because they have a variety of ice cream at good prices, and it supports the University," said Kristin Roberts, senior in life

The dairy counter specializes in 40 flavors of ice cream, with 16 available each day. Vanilla is the most popular, with chocolate running a close second, Harold Roberts said. It also specializes in non-traditional flavors such as chocolate-chip mint, strawberry cheesecake and purple pride.

'We make all of our ice cream with 12-percent butter fat. I put it into a premium product category. That's our goal. We will be bringing in some special flavors some time this year. I've also been thinking about bringing in some sherbets and yogurts in the future," Harold Roberts said.

The counter also sells a 16percent butter fat super premium in vanilla only

In addition to ice cream, the counter sells milk, cheese, eggs and butter. The milk is from K-State's dairy farm, and the eggs are from the poultry farm, Harold Roberts

The profits made from the sale of these items go back into the department to keep the lab running and producing.

Call Hall not only promotes K-State products, but it also gives students majoring in food sciences and animal sciences and industry hands-on experience. Students work in the lab and learn to make the cheese and ice cream through classes. A staff of non-students run the lab year-round and keep it producing, Harold Roberts said.

All the milk purchased by Housing and Dining Services is from Call Hall. Van Zile Hall, Derby Food Center, Kramer Food Center and Edwards Hall use 250 gallons of milk a day, said Mary Molt, assistant director of Housing and Dining Services.

"It's a wonderful quality. The microbiological count on it is always so low, which makes it fresh and good quality. We're also able to support other K-State programs. It helps us, and it helps them," Molt

The dairy bar also sells a variety of sandwiches every day and cinnamon rolls from the Derby Bakery Tuesday and Thursday mornings. The dairy counter is open from 8:30 a.m. to 5:15 p.m. Monday through Friday.

Charity executives not hurting

THE ISSUE

The average salary for the chief executives of the top 100 charities in the United Statesis $155,000.

WE SUGGEST

Donators need to make themselves aware of just where their donations are going.

People donate money to charities without realizing how their dollars are being spent.

A survey by the Chronicle of Philanthropy showed that more than one-third of chief executives at the nation's 100 largest charities were paid more than $200,000 in salary and benefits last year.

Are these people being paid through the donations their organizations receive? How much of the money is getting to the people who need it?

For years, charities have had problems with mismanagement. The United Way of America has been the most recent example of poor management.

William Aramony, former president of the United Way, was ousted last February on charges of financial mismanagement. He earned a salary of $390,000 a year. The new president, Elaine Chao, will earn a yearly salary of only $195,000.

According to the survey, only six foundations with full-time, salaried chief executives were paid less than $100,000. Seven organization executives were paid more than $400,000 a year; 13 were paid more than $300,000, and 37 received more than $200,000. The average salary was $155,000.

Charity executives should not be earning six-figure salaries.

When people donate money to a charity, they want to know it is helping needy people, not lining the pockets of greedy people.

Before donating money to charities with high-paid executives, such as the W.M. Keck Foundation, Pew Charitable Trusts and J. Paul Getty Trust, find out how your dollars are being

"Tragedy, then, is the imitation of an action something is far removed from "Tragic fire that is serious, complete, and of a certain magnitude." - Aristotle

... to many people cheese will not seem the likeliest of tragic materials." - Robert B.

eilman, briefly, is the sort of critic whom you may expect to read only in a particularly sadistic literature course. In his essay "Tragedy and Melodrama," he critiques current popular and journalistic usage of the term "tragedy." In his view, a plane crash, while certainly capable of causing pain and anguish, simply does not exhibit the moral and ethical conflicts indicated by "tragedy," which should be reserved for situations of Shakespearean

My populist instincts drove me to reject this idea immediately. Language should not be used to impose cultural values (the basis, I think, of the PC movement), but it should spring naturally from cultural reality. In our culture, "L.A. tragedy leaves five maimed" is a legitimate usage, an attempt to ground an occurrence firmly in a familiar metaphor. In this case, the word "tragedy" helps us distinguish this brand of maiming from, say, a basketball story.

Lately, however, I've been rethinking my sentiments. After a few English classes, "tragedy" begins to mean something, and that incinerates pets; people escape." A tragedy is a story that involves basic conflicts between desires or needs, involving decisions consequences.

It is hard to imagine a plane crash in these terms: The pilot weighs the desire to fly into the stratosphere and his need to return to earth; past pressure to become an astronaut results in an error in judgment that rips off a wing. Flight recorders never give so interesting a story.

Hurricane Andrew was no tragedy, either. Heilman suggests the word "disaster" for these situations (though one may ask what the stars have to do with it), which are rightly observed as horrible occurrences.

HAWKS

There is no plot, no program, in these events in fact, much of the suffering in the wake of Andrew was caused by the government's lack of

Maybe there's enough tragedy there for a made-for-TV movie, but not enough for my aesthetic sense. Perhaps all the male teens in Florida making love to their mothers under the black skies of Andrew would make it a real

I write this because I worry about our morals. In storybooks, tragedy is what happens to people with a fate worse than death. Those involved would usually rather be dead than face their fates.

Today, by using the word "tragedy" as a blanket term for anything that can cause death, or deprive us of what we think we deserve, we cease to acknowledge that there are things worse than not getting what we want. Our moral sense of justice, rather than restricting desires, is determined by them.

Further, our systematic use of "tragedy" for bad situations has deprived us of language to adequately characterize those things. A hurricane is a tragedy, as is a tornado, as is a plane crash. Our sense of tragedy, which Aristotle thought should inspire us with fear and pity, leaves us too much to pity and hardens us to fear

Perhaps it is simply the case that our society has grown capable of inflicting so many evils upon the world that it has lost the ability to distinguish between them. I hope we are just lazy in our language usage. I don't aspire to change usage of the word "tragedy" just to make people more aware of its true potential.

After all, Heilman would put you to sleep.

Broken promises, tax hikes mark right

Editor,

This letter is in reference to Brian Ochsner's feeble attempt to defend conservatism in the Sept. 4 Collegian. I would like to begin by correcting one of his mistakes.

He indicated, in reference to the House banking scandal, that "representatives (were allowed) to get interest-free loans on taxpayers' money." The fact is that not 1 cent of taxpayers' money was loaned to the representatives. The bank was structured in a way that allowed representatives to receive interest-free loans from each other's accounts.

This type of misinformation has been a trademark of conservatives for the last 12 years under Presidents Reagan and Bush. A perfect example is the tax issue. While the conservatives have been preaching about decreasing the tax burden on the American people, they have done the exact opposite.

We all know about Bush's broken tax promise in 1990. when we saw the second-largest tax increase in history, but few of us know about Reagan's tax increases. In 1981, while pledging to decrease taxes, he presided over the largest tax increases in our nation's history.

Furthermore, conservatives constantly try to label the Democrats as "tax and spend." Again, the facts indicate a different picture. Using the same tax increase formula that calculated that Bill Clinton raised taxes 128 times as governor of Arkansas, Reagan/Bush have raised taxes 596 times. On the spending side, under Reagan/Bush, the national debt has tripled from about $1 trillion in 1980 to approximately $4 trillion today.

From now on, I propose that we stick to the facts when we debate these important political issues. Then again, I guess this is why Bush has rejected the invitations to debate Clinton in front of the American people.

Collegian trips over diversity awarness

I found the Sept. 8 Collegian to be very interesting reading. There was a big front-page article about administration's response to the proposal made by Black Student Union last spring. The article detailed plans to recruit minority faculty for tenure-track positions and other multicultural issues. The article mentioned that the Native-American Student Body, as well as Asian-American Students for Intercultural Awareness, BSU and the Hispanic-American Leadership Organization were involved in the discussion of multicultural issues.

The article states that "The Collegian has added a diversityawareness session to its training

Well, Collegian, I have something for you to discuss at #### Confidence key to successful marriage

Messrs.(sic)Hastings and Mills make interesting points concerning cohabitation and marriage. Couples who cohabit may be both different from and initially less confident than those who marry. These are said to render comparisons invalid.

It is a good observation that cohabiting couples may differ in the value they place on marriage. This is exactly the problem.

Successfully living together requires the confidence to make a covenant, the marriage vow, of great proportions. Committing to a long-term, monogamous marriage is a worthwhile and rewarding goal, deserving of every effort.

Graduate student, economics

▶ SEXUALITY

Same-sex marriages invite ethical conflict

is wrong.

This letter is a response to the Friday editorial concerning same-sex marriages.

The points made in the column are very weak arguments for what the writers propose. Here are three points to be made about the proposal: 1) That a certain person or society recognizes a particular group's practices is not sufficient grounds to legitimize a change in a political stance.

2) What the writer proposes is for the government to condone homosexuality. Until now, society has been forced to recognize the practice. To force a society to condone a practice, which on the whole is contrary to their moral and ethic beliefs,

3) The Kinsey report, which is the most likely source of the writers' figures of 10 percent, is unreliable. This is due to faulty mathematics. A representative population is chosen because it most closely represents the society, which one wants to study. Thus, the population is on a level one can study statistically.

Kinsey, who set out to pick a representative population of the United States, picked one that had a disproportionate number of prison inmates. It is as accurate to say American society consists of a large percentage of convicts than it is to say it is 10 percent homosexual.

The point to be made is that before admonishing change (sic), we should consider the justification for the change and the long-term effects on the whole of society.

Budget transfer debate to resume

Question of the week: Where is the "Question of the Week"?

At last Thursday's Senate meeting, Business Sen. Clayton Wheeler moved to table the debate over transferring $595 from the fiscal year 1992 budget to the 1993 budget so a "Question of the Week" could be put in the K-State Union for student reaction.

DeLoss Jahnke, chairman of the communications committee, said the committee thought the timing wasn't right because most students had not had a chance to hear both sides of the issue.

"I haven't heard of people being really adamant about the issue one way or the other," he said.

Student Senate will continue the debate in tonight's meeting.

If the bill is passed, the money will be used to defray the persenator cost of the retreat. Such an action would have to be approved by the finance committee.

When filing to run for Senate, applicants must sign a form saying they will be responsible for cost incurred through the retreat.

At last week's meeting, faculty representative Phil Anderson said he thought the bill presented a conflict of interest because senators knew in advance they would be responsible for the cost of the

"We're voting money to fund the retreat after the fact," he said.

Student Body President Jackie McClaskey said she thinks there are strong arguments on both sides of

"I don't have a problem at all with efficient use of funds for student-government activities," she said. "But my personal preference is if Student Government Association is going to fund itself, it should be done beforehand."

McClaskey added that the bill being considered after the retreat was just as much her fault as anybody else's.

There are plans in the future to include the cost of the retreat in SGA's budget, McClaskey said. That way, not only will the cost be known in advance, but so will the expense per senator before they file to run for office.

Although Senate usually meets in the Union Big 8 Room, it will meet tonight in Union 212.

The FDA and the U.S.

Animal and Plant Health Inspection Service announced an expanded program to protect consumers from salmonella in grade A shell eggs through increased testing, enhanced tracking of suspect eggs and advice on safe egg storage, handling and cooking.

'The joint program will not eradicate salmonella bacteria or eliminate all risk of disease, but it will help us deal more effectively with the problem and minimize the risk to the public health," FDA Commissioner David Kessler said.

The new program includes breeder flock testing, research, and consumer education. It also consists of making recommendations to restaurant managers, retail markets and institutions on the proper ways to store, handle and cook eggs.

Salmonellosis comes from eating food that contains salmonella bacteria. Symptoms include nausea, diarrhea, abdominal pain and vomiting. However, in immunecomprised people, the elderly and young children, the symptoms can be more severe, said Linda Perry, chief of services for the bureau of Kansas reported 245 cases of salmonellosis in 1991, she said.

Perry said the bureau expects a rise in numbers this year, but it will be due partly to the method of reporting.

"The numbers will probably be up 25-30 percent this year, and that might be a low estimate," Perry said. She also said summer is a high-risk time of year because of outdoor activities.

The first outbreak occurred in Marshall County in June, the second in Jefferson County in July.

K-State ROTC to operate with less personnel

K-State's ROTC is here to stay, despite cuts in military personnel and low enrollment numbers.

In the years since the end of the Cold War, the U.S. military has been downsizing. Military budgets and personnel have been cut.

Lt. Col. Dennis Ritter, of Air Force ROTC, said the real problem for ROTC will be loss of personnel, not budget problems.

"There's less money to go around for everyone," Ritter said. We're operating on a small budget anyway, so we don't see large

Ritter said he has lost two staff members recently who will not be replaced. This will mean doing the same amount of work as before with a smaller staff.

Another problem relating to personnel cuts awaits students graduating from Air Force ROTC.

One year ago, 2,500 commissions were available for graduates. The most recent figure is now about 1,500, Ritter said. Still, once the cuts have been made, he said a balance will be struck between ROTC enrollment and the number of commissions to be awarded.

"For the people coming into the Air Force, things are just as bright in the future as when I entered, if not brighter," Ritter said.

FRANK KLEEMANN

Collegian

The flag is raised.

After one year without tents around Ahearn Field House, the campout for basketball season tickets is back.

When the flag was raised at 1:40 p.m. Wednesday, about 50 students sprinted to the sign-up table at the east entry to Curtis Norden, junior in economics, was the fastest, grabbing the pole position for his group, the Beer Drinkers' Society.

Grant Janke, junior in finance and BDS member, said he and his friends waited a long time for the purple flag to be raised.

"We were checking Aheam for about a week," he said. "We had three guys standing here since then, and one was sitting here since 8 o'clock this morning.

The campout, however, will not be the same as students who were here for other campouts may remember it.

In 1990, prior to the cancellation of the campout, tickets were given away in the form of a lottery.

This time, it's a first-come, firstserved basis. There are also two separate campouts: one east of Ahearn for general-admission tickets and one on the north side for ICAT members.

The camping lasts two days for ICAT members and 72 hours for others. The limited time is based on the bad experience the athletic department and Student Governing Association had in 1990, said Derek Nelson, athletic ticket sales committee chairman.

"There was a lot of damage going on," Nelson said. "The athletic department had some concern about the damage. People camped out waiting for the actual campout, and the place was trashed."

But after the campout was canceled, a number of students worked to reinstate it. Several residence halls had their own campout, and others printed T-shirts calling for the student tradition to return. Athletic Director Milt Richards said he knew right away there was a problem when he arrived at K-State. "You hate to see old, successful traditions die," he said. "That's why it was important to bring it back.

"I hope the students are happy." Basketball coach Dana Altman also said the campout is a welcome return.

"I think it's great to have it back. It's very important to K-State," he said. "I hope it will encourage the students to purchase combined tickets.'

Altman and his team will continue tradition by serving campers a meal at the end of this week.

Nelson said the one-year break won't hurt the tradition, despite the changes.

"Once people get down here and camp, they will see the tradition again," he said.

And students, including Mark Mazour, junior in architectural engineering, have already discovered another reason for the campout.

"There's nothing better than a party on campus," he said.

Wildcat fans rank higher than others

"Where are the best fans?"

As the 1992 football season shifts into second gear, it's still too early to concern myself with who has the best college gridiron team. Yeah, yeah, I know - Miami.

After spending last Saturday afternoon in the Red Sea - Nebraska's Memorial Stadium I answered a few of my own questions about Big Eight fans. Which university do you think has the best group of fans in the collegiate pigskin ranks?

Let's stay in our neck of the woods for now. Saving you, the K-State faithful, 'til last, tour with me the stadiums of the Big Eight conference for a fan overview.

First of all, let's backtrack to Lincoln. The Huskers probably have the best fans in the conference and this part of the nation. How can anyone argue with 183 consecutive sellouts since the 1960s? You can't. That's 74,000 in attendance every time they play at home.

Secondly, the red. Everybody wears it to the game. I wore a white T-shirt to the Nebraska-Utah massacre and felt out of place. It was like I had the plague. Never in my life have I seen sooo much red!

For a period of time, it seemed more Husker red came to Manhattan for games than Wildcat purple. Husker fans aren't perfect, though - especially the students. They have no clue what it means to stand. True fans do.

WALTERS

Onward to Oklahoma, but not for long. Sooner fans get a thumbs-down from me because of their fight song. "Boomer Sooner" is the most annoying fight song in America.

Kansas, Missouri, Iowa State and Oklahoma State get lumped together. Of the four, KU gets the edge for quality fans. Part of that comes from their creativity during basketball season. The other three have nothing to cheer about in the fall.

Then comes Colorado. Colorado has, undoubtedly, the best mascot in the country. Ralphie III, the 1,200-pound buffalo who can reach speeds of up to 25 mph, puts OU's wagon and Herbie Husker to shame.

Hmm. Where do K-State fans fit in? In all honesty, not in first. I will, however, give the Purple Pride a strong second-place finish. One reason is the students. They stand for almost the entire game. Next comes the rowdiness. Heck, football and basketball are the only things to get worked up about in this state. There's nothing else to do.

And anyone who takes time to clip a chicken's wings, tie its legs together and throw it in the student section earns points for

Even though K-State football isn't on the same level as Notre Dame, Penn State and Florida State, its fans are.

But remember this - there is one person responsible for me considering the Wildcat fans above average: Bill Snyder. If it weren't for him, his staff and the players he's brought to town, the purple faithful would still be in a permanent coma.

Manhattan fall softball off to swinging start

TONDO WALDRON

Batter up - fall softball is in full

The Manhattan Parks and Recreation Department fall softball league can accommodate 86 teams, and K-State students make up a large part of those

"This is the largest group of teams we have ever had sign up for fall ball," said Ivan Wilkinson, recreation supervisor for the department.

Wilkinson attributes the increase to the recent expansion of the Twin Oaks softball complex at Anneberg Park.

'We will no longer be limited to playing at City Park in the fall while the main fields at Twin Oaks are being reconditioned," Wilkinson said. "With the addition of two new fields located on the south end of the complex, more teams are able to participate. Wilkinson said about 15 of the 48 men's teams and eight of the 32 coed by friends who spent the summer in teams consist entirely of college Manhattan.

The parks department regrets not being able to accommodate all of the students who have called in the last few weeks with inquiries about playing fall softball, Wilkinson said.

The deadline for fall softball entries expires before students return from summer break so that the season can start before bad weather arrives.

"Last year, we finished the season on Halloween, and there was snow on the ground," Wilkinson said. Many college teams made the deadline because members spent the summer in Manhattan.

"The Prairie Dogs have played over 50 games together this summer," said member Doug Kraemer, junior in accounting. "It would be silly to break up that kind of chemistry."

Some students were added to rosters

"I guess the Bleachers' team heard about my level of play and penciled me in," said Scott Forkenbrock, senior in secondary education and business.

The league also has student umpires. Todd Gurss, senior in finance, said he spends two nights a week playing softball and one night umpiring.

"Playing softball is relaxing, but umpiring allows me to meet a lot of people, and it relieves the tension from a full day of classes," Gurss said. "The umpire always has the last

Recreational Services has more participants, more officials, more attractions and more machines than ever, said associate directors Steve Martini and Brian Skinner.

Why the increase? "I have no idea," Martini said. "It's hard to predict from one semester to the next. It doesn't hinge on one thing."

The increases, however, aren't "There are 185 flag football teams this year - that's one more than last year," Skinner said. "We have an increase in the numbers of soccer teams to 40,up by four. "Numbers are way up in tennis and in doubles volleyball," Skinner said. "We have started a women's soccer league. We hope to make it popular and to divide the teams into Flag football and doubles volleyball are open for co-rec teams. Soccer is open to anyone.

Forty flag-football officials are on duty this year, an increase of 10. 'We're able to have a three-man crew," Martini said. "That's better than just two men officiating.' A new attraction at the Chester E. Peters Recreational Complex is the football and soccer rankings.

We look at scores and the team's past history and ask officials which teams are better," said Skinner, who created the polls.

Although the rankings may not be high-tech, Martini said, they are not random either.

"It's not computerized," he said, "but they're not pulled out of a hat." Several machines will arrive soon in the fitness area on the second floor. Among the new exercise equipment will be a cross-country ski machine and two universal stair machines.

Entries for the miniature golf and the faculty/staff golf tournaments are being accepted. Deadlines for miniature golf and faculty tournaments are Sept. 10 and 24, respectively.

Yount joins illustrious club with 3,000th hit

ASSOCIATED PRESS

MILWAUKEE - He broke in as an 18-year-old shortstop in 1974. And now, 19 seasons later, Robin Yount has become a player for the ages with the Milwaukee Brewers.

Unassuming, consistent and durable, the Brewers' Rockin' Robin has reached 3,000 hits, joining only 16 other majorleague players on one of baseball's most elite lists. All but Pete Rose, barred from baseball for betting, are in the Hall of Fame.

Yount got No. 3,000 Wednesday night, a line single to right center off Cleveland's Jose Mesa, in the seventh inning.

"I've been fairly consistent and been fortunate to stay away from a major injury that kept me out for an extended period of time. The key has been consistency and health," said Yount, who's been on the disabled list only twice in his

Does Yount, a career .288 hitter entering the season, consider himself a great player?

Nope.
"The numbers show that," he says. "What's so great about a .280 or whatever lifetime average? It's been just good enough to keep my name in the lineup.

A week shy of his 37th birthday, Yount is the thirdyoungest player to hit the 3,000hit milestone. Only Ty Cobb, who was 34, and Hank Aaron, who was 36 years and four months, were younger when they got their 3,000th.

Yount, never one to like the spotlight, has played his entire career with the same smallmarket Brewers, joining them after only one short minorleague season.

He is one of three major leaguers to win two Most Valuable Player Awards at different positions. He won as a shortstop in 1982 when the Brewers went to their only World Series. After switching to the outfield in 1985 because of shoulder problems, he won his second MVP four years later as a centerfielder, even though the Brewers were a .500 team that

Attorney enjoys people, variety

It is the variety of issues that Jennifer Kassebaum finds most challenging about her new position as K-State assistant attorney.

"It's just such a wide range of topics we deal with," Kassebaum said. She began her job Aug. 4.

A native of Osawatomie in southeastern Kansas, Kassebaum graduated from the University of Kansas in 1985 with a bachelor's degree in journalism. She then enrolled in KU's law school, from which she graduated in 1989.

Upon graduation, Kassebaum worked as assistant county attorney in Reno County.

She and her husband then moved to Morris County, where she served as assistant county attorney, then county attorney. This made it geographically more convenient for her to work in Manhattan than

It was her experience in litigation that prompted her interviewers at the hiring committee to give her the K-State position. Kassebaum was one of about five applicants chosen from an initial 30 to attend the final interview. "We were interested in somebody who had some litigation experience and wanted to do litigation, because that seems to be where a lot of our time is spent. She has that," University Attorney

"Also, we wanted somebody we thought would interact well with our clients here on campus, and she seems to have scored well on that." Kassebaum said the work so far has been fine.

"It's a very good position - to be working for a university. People in the office have been very nice. I'm learning a lot," she said. "The only complaint I have would probably be the parking."

Internships provide hands-on experience

A lot of hard work and little-tono pay now could pay off big come graduation day.

Student internships or work experience before graduation benefits everyone, said Jim Akin, director of K-State's Career Planning and Placement Center.

Students with experience in their fields have an edge over people who don't, he said, and they may get better jobs after graduation.

"Internships give students the chance to test themselves in the working world, gain confidence in themselves, provide additional material for their resumes and provide the opportunity to network," Akin said.

Kelli Eidson, senior in retail floriculture, said her internship resulted in a job based on her experience.

She interned one summer for a florist in Independence, Kan. From there, she got a part-time job with Kistner's Flowers and Greenhouses and was hired full time following graduation in May.

"Internships give you hands-on experience you need," Eidson said. "It just lets you know more of what you really need to know - like working with unhappy customers that can't be taught in the

House bank investigation criticized

Several Democrats remain suspicious of Republican inquiry into overdrafts ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — Democrats are criticizing a Justice Department investigation of the House bank, even though some lawmakers are finding FBI agents at their doors bearing letters clearing them of criminal wrongdoing.

The agents on Wednesday visited some House members who wrote at least one overdraft at the now-closed members' bank. They delivered a letter from department special counsel Malcolm R. Wilkey, informing recipients they were no longer under investigation.

But even as they opened their envelopes, several Democrats, suspicious of a Republican criminal inquiry into a Democratic-run bank, made it clear they did not consider the letters a welcome gift.

Rep. Ben Jones, D-Ga., who had seven overdrafts on his House bank account, scoffed at the letter he received and called the probe 'highly partisan and political.'

An Associated Press survey found that at least 70 House members of both parties had received the letter Wednesday, and leaders said more would be delivered over the next few days.

But Wilkey's letter and a separate Justice Department statement said some members' accounts were too voluminous for an immediate decision. Those lawmakers would probably remain under a legal cloud right through Election Day.

Bosnians attacked U.N. peacekeepers

Commander says assault was attempt to force involvement

ASSOCIATED PRESS

SARAJEVO. Bosnia-Herzegovina (AP) - The commander of U.N. troops in Sarajevo accused Bosnian government forces Wednesday of attacking a convoy in what another official termed an "act of war" against the United Nations.

The U.N. Security Council expressed "deep concern" about Tuesday's attack, which killed two French soldiers and wounded five.

Many observers said they believe the attack was a high-risk attempt to try to force the United Nations to increase involvement in Bosnia, where government forces are frustrated at losing most of their territory to the Serbs.

But the attack may simply have reflected anger toward the peacekeepers for their failure to challenge the Serbs' encirclement of the city.

In Paris, French Foreign Minister Roland Dumas called the assault "a veritable act of war against members of a humanitarian operation." The French government demanded Bosnian authorities protect the peacekeepers and punish the guilty.

"The light was clear enough to see the U.N. insignia," said U.N. Brig. Gen. Hussein Aly Abdulrazek. "These irresponsible elements ... have a deliberate plan to jeopardize our presence in Sarajevo.'

Sefer Halilovic, commander of the Bosnian forces, told the Associated Press that the government was looking into the attack. He did not admit that his forces opened fire on the convoy.

In Geneva, meanwhile, U.N. officials said an airlift to the besieged capital was unlikely to resume before next week. The airport has been under heavy attack for the past three days, and it was closed last week after an Italian aid plane was apparently shot down on approach.

In Zagreb, Croatia, Lord Owen and former Secretary of State Cyrus Vance, co-chairmen of an international peace conference on former Yugoslavia, arrived for talks with U.N., Red Cross and Croatian officials. They were to visit Sarajevo and Belgrade later this Vance called the deaths of the two French peacekeepers "coldblooded murder" and said those responsible should be tried. Owen said he believed the attack would strain, but not stop, convoys.

Acting Secretary of State Lawrence S. Eagleburger said in Washington that Muslims were probably responsible for the attack, but still blamed Serbs for the overall "mess there is now in Bosnia-Herzegovina."

The nearly 400,000 remaining residents in Sarajevo, besieged for five months by Serb forces, have relied on the airlift for food. medicine and other basics. There is no immediate danger of starvation,. but officials warn of shortages of drugs, chlorine for purifying water and fuel for hospital generators.

The Bosnian Health Ministry said Wednesday that 29 people had died and 181 were wounded in fighting throughout Bosnia in the previous 24 hours, including 20 dead and 68 wounded in Sarajevo.

At least 9,000 people - some estimates say 35,000 - have been killed since majority Muslims and Croats voted on Feb. 29 to secede from Serb-dominated Yugoslavia.

In recounting events just prior to the convoy attack, Abdulrazek said the convoy's French commander had negotiated a cease-fire with government and Serb forces near the airport. Fighting ceased for about 20 minutes when the convoy

Yeast may rise out of this world

ASSOCIATED PRESS

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. -It's something scientists have been wondering about for years: Will bread yeast rise in the weightlessness of space? Every which way but up?

They're about to find out. Astronauts heading into space this weekend will score a culinary first by baking bread aboard the space shuttle Endeavour.

Betty Crocker would be proud. The two tiny loaves promise to be the most wondrous of breads. But don't expect them to win any blue ribbons; ground tests with the equipment produced pale, spongy loaves.

That's beside the point.

"We're not making it to eat. We don't care about freshness," said Gerry Senechal, manager of the project for Canada's Spar Aerospace Limited. "We just want to see if the bread does rise, and if it does, how it looks."

Endeavour is scheduled to lift off on the bread-baking quest - or water. There are no additives, space station, they said, 'Wouldn't Spacelab mission, to be more sugar or salt. There also are no precise — at 10:23 a.m. Saturday. The countdown began Wednesday, followed by the arrival of the seven-member crew, which includes the first married couple to fly in space, the first black female astronaut and the first Japanese citizen to fly on a U.S. ship.

One of the astronauts will activate the two bread-making chambers in a cargo bay canister by throwing a switch. Here's what should happen:

Water will be heated by battery to 104 degrees Fahrenheit and injected into a flour and yeast mixture. A small rotary motor will mix the dough for seven minutes; then the dough will be allowed to rise for half an hour.

Each chamber will be cranked up to 302 degrees Fahrenheit. An hour later, the bread should be done, and the ovens will shut off. The recipe for each loaf calls for 1.13 ounce of white flour, 0.025 ounce of yeast and 0.64 ounce of exposed heating elements and thus no crust.

Each loaf will be 3 3/4 inches long and 1 1/2 inches in diameter. "It's just to prove it works. It's not like it's supposed to feed a family," Senechal said, laughing. The chefs - Spar technicians who normally work on satellite components - settled on the final recipe after several trial runs in their Montreal laboratory. As a precaution, the trashcansized canister containing the experiment has been purged with nitrogen to remove any trace of oxygen, which could feed a flame. The bread-baking idea was cooked up by winners of a 1984 contest sponsored by Spar, which was seeking suggestions for an experiment to fly on a shuttle.

Seven thousand Canadians submitted ideas. Ten suggested bread.

"Since bread is a staple food of North America and NASA is planning to have people live on a it be nice and fitting to see how bread is cooked in space, so people who live in space one day can bake their own bread?" Spar spokeswoman Diane Chenevert said.

The experiment, for which NASA was paid $5,000, was scheduled for a 1986 shuttle flight. But the Challenger disaster that year put everything on hold.

Spar persevered and eventually got a slot on Endeavour.

"After eight years, I really kind of thought it might not happen," said winner Kathleen Clayton, 44, a laboratory technician from Calgary, Alberta, who bakes her own bread. "But that little glimmer was always kind of there."

Six of the 10 winners, including Clayton, will be at Kennedy Space Center to see Endeavour off. That was the prize.

They won't get so much as a crumb of the bread, though. Slices will be given to a half-dozen Canadian high schools for display or experimentation.

A burglar, a spy, a fugitive, a delinquent, a hacker, and a piano teacher... and these are the good guys.

Moving Van Goghs release habit-forming EP

HEATHER ANDERSON

After listening to the Moving Van Goghs' new EP, "Octaphenia," a big question comes to mind.

Why in the hell don't these guys have a contract yet?

These days, dime-a-dozen Seattle-esque crap acts are pocketing money like Manhattan landlords, while the Van Goghs eat Ramen noodles. What's going on here?

key to the lifestyles of the rich and famous, mostly because it's only an EP. But then again, the album is habit forming. It's the kind of stuff you get stuck in your head for the rest of the day.

And you don't even mind.

It packs diversity, imagination and power, all while staying true to the Van Goghs' original sound.

The two other tracks, "Machines in the Garden" and "Air Conditioned Infinite Dream," are more melodic in style, with less of a Top-40 feel, but they are still great.

The latter two will appeal more to longtime Van Goghs fans than the former, but the album as a whole attracts new listeners without abandoning the band's identity and local following.

The product is well worth the delay in the EP's release, apparently resulting from a squabble among band members about the album packaging. (Does anyone else find this a bit Spinal Tap-ish?)

California decision allows optional viewing ASSOCIATED PRESS

SAN JOSE, Calif. - A judge Wednesday rejected the state's attempt to ban Channel One from a school district, but ordered school officials to make clear that watching the commercial classroom news show is optional.

The decision in the closelywatched case followed victories in New Jersey and North Carolina for Channel One, which has come under fire because the 12-minute public affairs and news program includes two minutes of advertising for such things as candy bars and

About 7.1 million students in some 12,000 public and private schools in 45 states watch the Channel One broadcasts each school day. In return, the program's operator, Knoxville, Tenn.-based Whittle Communications, provides schools with expensive video equipment.

Proponents say Channel One programs teach students about current events and stimulate them to read newspapers. Critics say the students are a captive audience for advertisers. Communications has said it would scrap the program without the advertising, which earns the company about $630,000 a day. The California Department of Education had sued to get the program out of San Jose's East Side Union High School District because of the advertising. Judge Jeremy Fogel of Santa Clara County Superior Court denied the state's request for an injunction.

"The court is not persuaded that the mere presence in public schools of commercial advertising, even the type of advertising shown on Channel One, is illegal per se," Fogel said.

Van Slyke challenges Slattery, wants limited terms

Jim Van Slyke listens to a question during an interview Tuesday afternoon. Van Slyke is running against Rep. Jim Slattery, D-Kan., for the 2nd District seat.

Jim Van Slyke said his campaign is picking up speed.

In the race just a little more than two months, Van Slyke is the Republican candidate running against 2nd District Representative Jim Slattery, D-Kan., in this year's election.

Van Slyke has hit the ground running on the Republican party theme of "Throw the Democrat bums out of Congress.'

Imposing term limits, Van Slyke said Tuesday at K-State, is the first step in improving Congress. He said Congress should impose limits of 10 or 12 years on members of Congress.

"That will institutionalize and infuse some new ideas in Congress," he said.

Some critics of term limits have said they have no place in a democracy or free elections. Van Slyke said he disagrees.

"If term limits don't have a place in a democracy, then why do we put limits on our president?" he said. "Philosophically you can say, 'If you don't like someone, you can vote them out of office.' But Congress has built a wall around itself, making it near impossible for incumbents to be unseated.'

Van Slyke argued that up until this year, about 98 percent of incumbents were reelected in every election. And, he said, there are some very good reasons for that. The first is the large number of people incumbents have working on their respective congressional staffs, Van Slyke said.

"They've got 20-some people that keep in touch with constituents, do research on part of their official job, but also go a long ways towards getting the incumbents reelected," he said.

The incumbent members of Congress also have frank mailings, or "free mail," Van Slyke said.

"They can send out mailings - under the guise of keeping in touch with their constituents - that would cost a challenger up to $500,000," he said.

Van Slyke also said incumbents have a tremendous advantage in raising money. The political action committees, Van Slyke said, give more to incumbents than they do to the challengers.

"The PACs see it as an investment," he said. "They don't give to someone because they like them or don't like them. They give to someone because they're going to be in office. And it becomes a vicious circle: PACs give to incumbents, incumbents get re-elected."

Van Slyke said in the short time he has been running, he has raised a little more than $20,000. Van Slyke claims that Slattery has raised much more than that, partly due to PACs.

"Right now, you don't have a level playing field," Van Slyke said. "That's why we need term limits."

Van Slyke said it would be easier to impose term limits than to change some of the things that make incumbents unbeatable.

"As long as you've got longtime members of Congress making those decisions, those things won't change," he

She also cited federal studies that show little difference between the nutrients consumed by low-income children and by wealthy children.

The primary calculation method for Brown's study used various poverty figures, such as estimates of poor people who collect food stamps but don't get enough nutrients. The numbers also included people above the poverty line whose relatively low incomes make them susceptible to hunger.

A second method used state surveys that asked people several questions such as whether they ever skip meals or cut the size of meals. The third method used results from a national poll that asked people if they knew someone close to them who didn't always have enough to

The Census Bureau reported last week that poverty reached a 27year high in 1991 while household incomes declined.

Brown said hunger could be eradicated in America for about $8 billion to $10 billion in additional annual spending.

A bill before Congress would expand eligibility of food stamps and increase benefits to eligible households. It would also impose a 10-percent surtax on taxable personal income above $1 million.

Akin said the University benefits, too. Interns learn to be contributors in their classes and give their professors feedback. Students who get good jobs based on their experience bring credibility to their programs, he said.

All eight colleges have programs requiring students to complete internships, Akin said. However, he doesn't know how many majors require internships.

To find internships, students should contact professors or whomever organizes them within their programs, Akin said. They can also consult the center, directories, family, friends, the library, the Manhattan Chamber of Commerce or professional publications, or make direct inquiries.

'Ur' not going to believe this question

DEAR CASSANDRA:

I have a question that has been playing on my mind a while now. I realize this may sound a bit strange, but I've talked to other people about it and they also wonder. How do the automatic urinals in the K-State Union men's room work? You use the restroom, and just as you are leaving, the urinal flushes. Is there some guy who is paid big bucks to look through a two-way mirror to see when you are finished and then hit the master flush button? Are there sensors mounted on the side of the urinal to detect movement? Are the urinals possessed? I wonder. Please, Cassandra, put the minds of the masses at ease and help us solve this little

T.K., K-State student

DEAR T.K .:

What an imagination! (And what a vocabulary - "perplexion"?) You can stop in person or by mail to the Kansas State Collegian, sweating now Dennis Wilson, Union maintenance technician, that the urinals in the Union flush with the assistance of an electronic eye that is activated when a gentleman stands in front of the urinal. When he leaves, the urinal flushes.

I am going to let you figure out where the sensor is located. Have fun looking, and watch your aim!

DEAR CASSANDRA:

I have a friend whose parents recently divorced. She is now faced with financial difficulties. Is there anywhere she can go for emergency assistance?

J.W., K-State junior

I will assume this person is 18 or older and in good mental and physical health. So, where can she go? My advice is she GO get a job, GO to work and GO pay taxes like the rest of poor and middle-class America.

Mark Mazour, junior in architectural engineering, was arrested and charged with one count each of rape and sodomy Thursday morning.

K-State Vice President Bob Krause said in a University press release that the incident raises a concern for student safety at the

"We met with members of the Student Governing Association, the student ticket sales committee and other student leaders this morning, and it was decided that the only prudent thing to do is to modify the campout schedule," Krause said. K-State Police also confiscated a large bottle of vodka from the tent where the alleged incident occurred.

"I think that there's a concern about the alcohol," Krause said. "It's something that the committee will address.

Krause said University actions are pending legal proceedings. Susan Scott, associate dean of student life, spoke to Student Senate Thursday night, asking that senators wait for more information before discussing possible ramifications and changes due to the incident.

"I don't think any of us today were prepared to make a statement," Scott said. "We don't have all the information. We're still collecting that.

"I think we really need to try to figure out what really happened, let the smoke clear a bit and have a chance to have some airing of what

Senate backs committee

Collegian

Susan Scott, associate dean of student life, asked Student Senate for leadership Thursday night concerning the alleged rape Thursday morning.

"My fear is the campout will be the issue, when in fact it is not," she said. "The real issue is sexual assault on campus."

The incident is not a result of the Senate's past decisions concerning the campout, she added.

Student Body President Jackie McClaskey commended the athletic ticket sales committee for its involvement in the campout and its efficient handling of the incident.

Derek Nelson, chairman of the athletic ticket sales committee, said the committee decided to end the campout after looking to the administration for guidance.

"After all, we are just students, too," Nelson said. "This situation caught everyone off-guard.

Senators to pay own way

After 30 minutes of debate, Senate killed the bill that would have transferred funds from the fiscal year 1992 budget to the 1993 budget to help finance its student retreat by a 14-37 roll-

Members will now have to pay the total retreat costs out of their own pockets, said Ian Bautista, Senate chairman. He said he anticipates the cost to be around $22.53 per SGA member.

The vote came after an amendment to raise the transferred amount from $595 to $650 was passed by a two-thirds vote.

Stephen Seely, agriculture senator and author of the amendment, said its main purpose was to lower the cost per senator of the retreat.

During debate, Doug Neuschafer, human ecology senator, said he talked to many of his constituents, and many of them did not care one way or the other.

"In two weeks, many won't remember what we decided," he said.

Neuschafer was in favor of the bill.

Todd Fertig, arts and sciences senator, said, Two weeks from now they will have the same image of student government they developed two weeks or two years ago.

Iraqi fighter crosses line in 'no-fly' zone

WASHINGTON - Two U.S. Air Force F-16s intercepted what appeared to be an Iraqi F-1 Mirage fighter jet early Thursday. The plane entered the zone established to protect the Kurds in northern Iraq, a Pentagon spokesman said.

There was no indication of hostile intent," Pentagon spokesman Pete Williams said.

The aircraft, which had crossed three miles north of the 36th parallel, quickly retreated south, Williams said, and there was no exchange of fire during the action.

The spokesman said such incursions have happened before. However, officials were probing whether Thursday's event was inadvertent or not.

The aircraft appeared to have been in the process of turning south as it was intercepted, Williams said. He also said he did not know whether there was any contact between the U.S. fliers and the Mirage.

Allied officials are not certain it was an Iraqi fighter, since coalition pilots fly such aircraft. This incident is still under investigation.

Israel, Syria near treaty

ASSOCIATED PRESS

JERUSALEM (AP) Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin said explicitly for the first time Thursday that Israel was prepared to return some of the Golan Heights to Syria in exchange for peace.

In return for a treaty that includes diplomatic relations and open borders, "Israel is ready to implement U.N. Security Council resolutions 242 and 338 ... and this means a readiness for some sort of territorial compromise," Rabin said on Israeli radio

Israel captured the Golan Heights in the 1967 Middle East War, and annexed the region in 1981.

The remarks came during a break in the sixth round of Middle East talks. Israeli officials said Syria has presented them with positions containing signs of common Bush also proposed cutting the pay of federal workers making over $75,000 a year by 5 percent. He also promised to cut White House spending.

Ag college dean resigns

Department head to take Woods' place

ROY GRABER

Walter Woods announced Thursday that he would resign from his duties as dean of the College of Agriculture, director of the Agricultural Experiment Station and director of the Cooperative Extension Service.

His resignation is effective today.

Woods, who accepted these positions during the summer of 1985, recently made a controversial proposal that would take the state's existing five extension areas and consolidate them into four

This consolidation would involve the elimination of a northeast region office, located in Manhattan on College Avenue. Counties in the northeast region most likely would be represented either in Hutchinson, Chanute or Colby.

Extension reorganization proposal met opposition from both K-State faculty and Kansans in the agricultural industry.

Woods said his decision to resign was not related to his proposal.

"Let me assure you that I have not felt pressures," Woods said.

"The resignation has nothing to do with my response to pressure. It just seemed like the right time for me to resign for both me and for the organization."

The vacancy Woods left will be filled temporarily by Marc Johnson, who has served as the head of the Department of Agricultural Economics since 1985.

Johnson said the Extension proposal could lead to both good and bad outcomes.

"That kind of controversy is never good for any organization," Johnson said. "However, public comment is good, because we can turn all of this public interest and show what we are doing. I think our position is retrievable."

departure is Woods' expected to create some changes within the college.

"Dean Woods has worked hard and is a very dedicated individual," said Provost Jim Coffman. "The program has made a lot of progress through his leadership.

"Now, we need to look into the future and build on that leadership, both inside and outside of the University."

Student Body President Jackie McClaskey, senior in agricultural economics and Their pride in K-State radiates from their faces.

Stories they tell are full of good times and warm thoughts. Their memories are not of names on a building or pictures on a wall, but of real people they knew and with whom they interacted.

The residents of Meadowlark Hills Retirement Community, many of whom are K-State alumni, went out to lunch at Kite's Bar & Grille for a back-to-school theme luncheon. The group meets monthly at a community restaurant to visit and reminisce.

Clarence Collins, K-State alumnus, remembers driving to K-State after wheat harvest in the early 1920s in a Model-T Ford that did not have lights or brakes.

"My first boss was Mike Ahearn," said another resident. Kay Geyer, retired professor of physical education. "I've always taught here, but I never went to school here. I graduated from Ohio State and came here because they offered me a job. I liked it so well that I've been here ever since. That was back in 1927.

Geyer said she was here when Nichols Hall burned in 1968.

"We lost everything we owned in that building, all of our equipment and that sort of thing," Geyer said. "You know those mats you tumble on? They took forever and a day to burn," she said, pinching her nose and making a horrible face as she remembered the smell.

Roger Regnier received his bachelor's degree in 1924 and his master's in 1932. He said he remembers Keith "Kite" Thomas, owner of Kite's Bar & Grille.

"He was a basketball player, and he was a good one," Regnier Regnier took a boxing class at K-State. He was three-year welterweight champion and twoyear middleweight champion. He won both titles in his sophomore and junior years.

"My senior year, I coached the first K-State boxing team for 25 cents an hour," Regnier said.

He shared another memory of University President Francis David Farrell, Farrell Library namesake.

'He asked me how to spell Pottawatomie, because I was from Pottawatomie County," Regnier said with a chuckle. "I don't know whether I spelled it right or not."

Excused absence policies set by instructors

You can skip classes some of the time, but don't expect to get away with it all of the time.

Susan Scott, associate dean of student life, said there is no University-wide "excused absence"

"This is one of the areas of confusion for faculty and students alike," Scott said. "Often, faculty members send students to our office to get excused for missed classes."

Scott said although the Dean of Student Life Office cannot excuse a student for missed classes, it does offer help.

"We will notify faculty when a student is absent because of illness or other emergency situation," Scott

The official notification policy states, "The Dean of Student Life Office will notify instructors of student absences from classes because of emergency if four or more days of classes are missed."

If three days or less are missed, the Dean of Student Life Office sends a form regarding the absence to the appropriate dean's office.

Copies of this form are available for any instructor upon request, Scott said.

The Dean of Student Life Office sends out 500-600 absence notifications each semester, Scott said.

only in the event of a genuine student emergency, such as serious illness or personal crisis.

"We don't say, 'Please excuse so

However, notification is made and so from class," Scott said.

Students should notify the Dean of Student Life Office at 532-6432 to have their instructors notified if they miss class due to an

According to the memo, students who know they will miss class for other reasons are responsible for notifying their instructors prior to leaving campus.

Scott said it is up to individual instructors to set attendance policies for their classes. Policies vary, depending on the structure and content of the class, she said.

'Some instructors drop grades for excessive absences. Some don't even take attendance," Scott said.

Principals of Physical Fitness is one class in which the attendance policy falls between these two extremes.

David Dzewaltowski, professor of kinesiology, said absences are allowed in lecture, but not in lab.

"The lab is a participation course," Dzewaltowski said. "The learning experience cannot be measured through lab assignments and exams only.

Brian Lee, junior in mechanical engineering, said he takes advantage of the more lenient attendance policies to catch up on needed sleep.

"I skipped my 8:30 class," Lee said. "They don't take attendance, and I would have slept in class, so I just decided to stay in bed.

"If I'm going to be late to a class, and I have a class after it, I'll go. If it's my only class, I'll probably skip," Lee said.

Missing student seen in Stanton County

ASSOCIATED PRESS

WICHITA - An Emporia State University student reported missing late last month was spotted in southwestern Kansas on Labor Day with a parole violator who is being sought by authorities.

Angela Benton, 19, appeared to be traveling voluntarily with the man, whom she met at a campus Christian center, officials said Wednesday.

"We'd still like to know her whereabouts and find out whether she was a willing participant or whether she was coerced," said Robert Davenport, director of the Kansas Bureau of Investigation. "But there seems to be every indication that she is, at this point, a willing participant. It takes a little bit of the pressure off as to whether you think the girl is in imminent danger," he said.

Benton and Walter Johnson, 62, were traveling in a van borrowed from the maintenance supervisor at the Emporia Christian Student

IN OUR OPINION

By the Collegian Editorial Board

Incident threatens campout

THE ISSUE

A recent incident of alleged rape threatens the future of the basketball ticket campout.

WE SUGGEST

The alleged rape should not be seen as a result of the campout, and that the campouts will continue in the future.

The campout has been canned.

A K-State student will be arraigned today on charges of rape and sodomy. The alleged incident on the first night of the campout for season basketball tickets led to a premature, unplanned end to the event.

The campout, resurrected this year after extensive, successful lobbying by students who missed the fun and tradition, has always been a party atmosphere. That's a big reason so many people wanted it back.

Unfortunately, it's also the type of atmosphere in which acquaintance rapes can happen.

But campout is not the cause of rape. Misogynistic attitudes, selfishness and lack of respect are responsible.

The University should be commended for its quick and open response to the case. The woman involved was referred to the Women's Resource Center, where she received the guidance and counseling so crucial after such a personal violation and trauma.

She, too, should be commended for stepping away from the estimated 90 percent of rape victims who keep silent.

It was also appropriate for the athletic ticket sales committee to end the campout early. Derek Nelson, ticket sales committee chairman, said most campers were shocked, disappointed and angry. But they understood. Some even withdrew their names from the list after the cancellation was announced.

The party had been tainted, and it was over. But this incident shouldn't be used to argue for banishing campout again. That kind of kneejerk reaction would be a Band-Aid solution that's really no solution at all to the broader problem of rape. It would give a false sense of security that rape has been eradicated at K-State.

Nelson said he agreed. He said he hopes the students and administration don't see the rape as a direct result of the campout.

Neither would it serve to call for increased supervision or control over the campout. The only control that can stop rape is self-control.

Stopping the campout in the future won't stop rape. Let's save any energy that may be devoted to that and put it toward changing attitudes about women and rape instead.

I was also voted "Most Likely to Be Involved in a Political Assassination Attempt." I guess there is no mistaking that I was a bit of a wild child in my younger days.

Others did die young. Tommy Alexander bright, good-looking, had a lot going for him drove his motorcycle off of the North Hill viaduct, not six blocks from our high school. John Hanrahan — a wild child if there ever was one - met a similar fate.

Too many were lost to drinking and driving, a few to disease, one or two were victims of violent crime. Some found Jesus; some lost their

I wandered around school, wearing black long before it was popular and toting a book of Sylvia Plath poems. I used razor blades as bookmarks. A dramatic prop, I guess. I lingered thoughtfully in front of open windows and gas ovens, drawn to the possibilities.

At 20, I could have bought it, like Tommy and John, hopped up on liquor or drugs or both, taking stupid chances.

I packed a whole lot of living into my 20s, and I had a great time. I rode on fast Harleys, explored the world, found a career, fell in love (too often), lived tornadoes, LISA through hurricanes and other natural or woman-made disasters. Still, I hadn't

Laws source of grief for student

"The 500 bucks they gave you ... have already been blown financing patio improvements down at Last Chance."

If you're like most K- long as you can get your Manhattanites line up to State students, you've been to class at least once or twice by now, and the Office of Student Financial Assistance has probably informed you that it'll be at least the first of November before your student loan will become available. What on God's green earth can you do?

Well, let's just say for the sake of argument that Mom and Dad have already cut you off. Yup, that's right. The 500 bucks they gave you for "moving expenses" and "school supplies" has already been blown financing the patio improvements down at Last Chance.

So, you decide to do what any normal college kid does to get back at his or her parents and make some quick cash — sell the car they've loaned you for the school

To paraphrase the law of the city of Manhattan, no person shall park on a public roadway for the principal purpose of sale. Failure to comply with this little piece of local legislative genius will result in a small, but nevertheless. significant monetary fine.

Now. ask yourself: What vital public interest does this law possibly serve to protect? To be honest, I'm a bit perplexed. Maybe the purpose of the law is to protect Manhattan's used-car dealers from private-sector competition. Or, maybe the works to ease law Manhattan's rush-hour traffic. Just think of the traffic nightmare that might to sell your parents' car, as erupt as hundreds of

I can only speculate on why our state forbids the use of a credit card in this instance. Maybe the state of Kansas wants to crack down on credit-card fraud. Or maybe liquor stores have a preference for checks and

More than likely, though, this is just another example of an aimless and archaic law, designed to make our lives more difficult.

Editor,

Whatever happened to that voice in the wilderness, Brad Seabourn, who was a columnist for the Collegian last year? I miss him.

This year the Collegian has published an ample number of columns and letters espousing a cosmic purpose for humankind on the opinion page, but, as yet, there is no alternative viewpoint to be read.

Letter's challenge shows its weakness

Editor,

I am writing in response to Karl Marnell's Aug. 28 letter to the editor, "Columnist misses ideas of separation." He wrote in response to John Hart's column addressing the oppression of Christian groups by the ACLU. Though Marnell expresses himself in a quite offensive manner, he has every right to speak out as he did.

However, one of his points caught my attention. Marnell proudly makes a powerful statement about a collection of books that is easily proven false. With a brief look into the scriptures, one can quickly discredit the horrendous claims of Marnell.

In reference to the Bible. Marnell states, "It condones murder, incest, sexism, cannibalism and slavery," and to back himself up, he simply just read it."

Wow! What proof he gives. A great challenge to look into the book itself. I invite you to take a look at a few scriptures, and compare your conclusions to his.

Let's start with his first claim, using the New International Version of the Bible, one of the most reliable versions available. Marnell says the Bible condones murder. That already clashes with everything everybody's been taught to believe about the Bible, but let us look at what the Bible really says itself. I found eight verses in my concordance that have the word "murder" in them. All of them speak of murder in a negative way, and five of them specifically say, "You shall not murder," or "Do not murder." Obviously, Marnell is not just incorrect in his assessment, but his claim is the exact opposite of what the Bible says.

His next claim is that the Bible condones incest. My Bible doesn't have the word "incest" in the concordance. So, I'll look for a Bible dictionary. It is addressed in Leviticus 18:1-18, and it is strictly forbidden. These verses even tell how most criminals of incest were put to death as punishment for their crime. That's not exactly what I would consider condoning.

And for No. 3, that the Bible condones sexism. There are many verses about specific women as well as verses about women in general. Specifically, the Bible, speaks well of a woman named Deborah who was a general and a judge. Sarah, Abraham's wife, was also portrayed with much respect because of her wisdom and modesty. The Bible also tells how women are to be treated by their husbands. In Ephesians 5:25, the Bible says "Husbands, love your wives as Christ loved the church and gave himself up for her." As we can see, women are cherished in God's word.

and sexism is not condoned. Finally, the last claim made by Marnell is that the Bible condones slavery. A verse in I Timothy lists slave traders with murderers, lawbreakers, the unholy, adulterers and others. This obviously was not an exalted profession by any

From this research, we can see that none of the claims of Marnell are supported by evidence. It is clear that he did not take the time that anyone should to become informed about a subject before insisting his position is right. As readers left with no evidence, Mr. Marnell, we decided to take you up on your challenge. We "just read it," and we found your claims to be false.

Broken assurance means nosebleeds

Editor,

The reinstatement of the campout is not what has gotten our ire up, but it is the way the ticket office is handling basketball tickets.

When the early-season basketball tickets were purchased, there was the assurance of a separate generaladmission section designated for people purchasing early. The section in question had seats running from the floor to the ceiling, but according to Tuesday's Collegian, the section for people who bought early season tickets will now be behind the people who participate in the campout, i.e. in another time zone within Bramlage Coliseum.,

Of course, anyone is free to participate in the campout, and we have before, but when we purchased season tickets, no one mentioned camping out. On the contrary, we were told that a section would be set aside next to the section of people without season tickets who had to campout.

Is this the way that the students who do not belong to large groups or are too busy to participate treated? Sometimes it's hard to be a basketball fan and a graduate student, especially when we have to sit in the nosebleed section to see a

Group strives to increase voters

County clerk refuses deputization of new organization

HEATHER ANDERSON

Youth for Change, a new campus organization, wanted to have a voterregistration drive today in K-State Union Plaza.

When group members went to be deputized by the county clerk, they were refused, said Angela Schmus, senior in political science and K-State coordinator of the statewide group.

"I've heard a lot of groups on campus have tried to do it (be deputized) and have been refused," Schmus said.

Currently, the Student Governing Association office is the only location on campus where students can register to vote. That location is sufficient, said Ilene Colbert, Riley County Clerk.

"I have told several people who have called that they can go to the SGA office to register," she said.

Colbert said she will no longer deputize students because of a previous bad experience. According to Colbert, a student arranged to register voters, but after a poor turnout the first day, didn't show up to register the second day.

"This reflects a bad image on our office," Colbert said.

"In addition, I have to consider the liability," Colbert said. "If someone gets hurt while registering to vote, Riley County is responsible.

Schmus said she had hoped the group could set up a table, because without it, the event could crowd the SGA office.

"If enough people decide to register at once, the office will be bombarded, and there's only one person to register voters," she said.

Youth for Change is a statewide organization started by the Ross Perot and Gloria O'Dell campaigns.

"The group is for students who may not be satisfied with either political party but still want to make a difference," Schmus said.

"A lot of people, especially students, think government is corrupt. They don't feel that if they voted, it would matter. We want them to see that collectively, with other students who feel the same way, their vote can count," she Youth for Change will have a table with group information from 1 to 3 p.m. in Union Plaza. In addition, local rock band Roach Factory will perform.

Committees target STD awareness

Dealing with the emotional and psychological aspects of AIDS and other sexually transmitted diseases will be highlighted in upcoming health programs.

The programs were organized by the Communicable Disease Committee.

Speaking at the committee meeting Thursday, Reita Currie, health educator at Lafene Health Services, spoke of the AIDS Memorial Quilt Display, which was on campus in the spring.

"The project was very well represented and in an accurate light by the media," Currie said. "The support provided by the community and corporations was invaluable." Currie said $607.16 was distributed to each of the three agencies involved.

The relationship between the influence of alcohol and the transmission of sexually related diseases was discussed.

Dr. Dori Lambert, University Counseling Services, spoke about possible coordination with Bill Arck, Lafene Drug/Alcohol counselor, to speak on the subject during Condom Sense Week. Lambert stressed the need to associate alcohol-induced violence with forcible sexual intercourse, which may in turn lead to a greater spreading of sexually transmitted diseases such as AIDS. The committee has plans to work with the Union Program Council in promoting understanding and compassion among the student body during the AIDS Awareness Month in October.

"Student interest is there," said Currie, in support of a suggestion to organize more student panels when the UPC follows up on national programming in the last week of

The committee will be running advertisements targeted against all sexually transmitted diseases in the Collegian later in the semester.

ISLANIATA GLANCE (3)

CONCEPT OF GOD IN ISLAM

It is a known fact that every language has one or more terms that are used in reference to God and sometimes to lesser deities. This is not the case with Allah. Allah Is the personal name of the One true God. Nothing else

The One true God is a reflection of the unique concept that Islam associates with God. To a Muslim Allah is the Almighty, Creator and Sustainer of the universe, Who is similar to nothing and nothing is comparable to Him. The prophet Muhammad was asked by his contemporaries about Allah; the answer came directly from God Himself in the form of a short chapter of the Quran, which is considered the essence of the unity or the motto of monotheism. This is chapter 112 which reads: In the name of God the Merciful, the Compassionate.

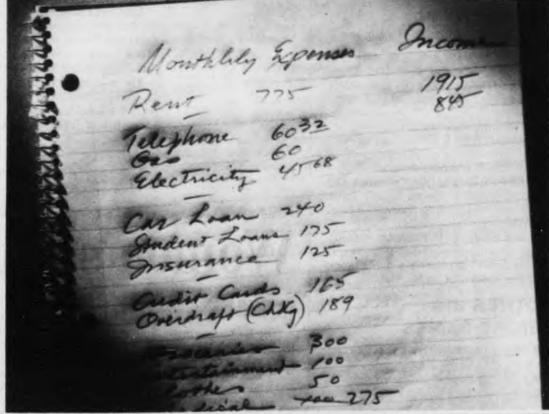

Say (O. Muhammad) He is God the One God, the Everlasting Refuge, who has not begotten, nor has been begotten, and equal to Him is not anyone.

Some non-Muslims allege that God in Islam is a stern and cruel God who demands to be obeyed fully. He is not loving and kind. Nothing can be farther from truth than this allegation. It is enough to know that, with the exception of one, each of the 114 chapters of the Quran begins with the verse: "In the name of God, the Merciful, the Compassionate." In one of the sayings of prophet Muhammad (PBUH) we are told that "God is more loving and kinder than a mother to her dear child." ALLAH THE CREATOR

The Creator must be of a different nature from the things created because if he is of the same nature as they are, he will be temporal and will therefore need a maker. It follows that nothing is like Him. If the maker is not temporal, then he must be eternal. But if he is eternal, he cannot be caused, and if nothing caused him to come into existence, nothing outside him causes him to continue to exist, which means that he must be self-sufficient. And if he does not depend on anything for the continuance of his own existence, then this existence can have no end. The Creator is therefore eternal and everlasting: 'He is the first and the last.'
He is self-sufficient or self-subsistent or, to use a Quranic term, Al-Qayyum. The Creator does not create only in the sense of bringing things into being, He also preserves them and takes them out of existence and is the ultimate cause of whatever happens to them.

God is the Creator of everything. He is the guardian over everything. Unto Him belong the keys of the heavens and the earth. No creature is there crawling on the earth, but its provision rests on God He knows its lodging - place and its repository. Muslim Community Association

PRINCIPLES OF SOUND RETIREMENT INVESTING Monthly Expenses Inco

IRONICALLY, THE TIME TO START SAVING FOR RETIREMENT IS WHEN IT LOOKS LIKE YOU CAN LEAST AFFORD IT.

an't afford to save for retirement? The truth is, you can't afford not to. Not when you realize that your retirement can last 20 to 30 years or more. You'll want to live at least as comfortably then as you do now. And that takes planning.

By starting to save now, you can take advantage of tax-deferral and give your money time to compound and grow. Consider this: set aside just $100 each month beginning at age 30 and you can accumulate over $192,539* by the time you reach age 65. But wait ten years and you'll have to budget $227 each month to reach the same goal.

Harriers to defend team titles

"I think it's a pretty lowkey meet. We just need a meet under our belt to see

After three weeks of running across the entire campus, the K-State cross country team will have its first opportunity to run in competition.

The women's team starts its race at 4:30 p.m. today at the JOHN CAPRIOTTI Wichita State Invitational, followed by the men's squad at K-State coach John Capriotti said the meet will serve only as preparation for later meets.

This is a good place to start after training very well," he said. "I think it's a pretty lowkey meet. But I don't really care about it. We just need a meet under our belt to see where we are."

K-State will start its season with this invitational for the third year in a row. This year's teams include Oklahoma State, Fort Hays State, Wichita State and several junior colleges. In all, 12 teams will compete.

Oklahoma State will also be the Cats' opponent in a dual race, which, Capriotti said, will serve as practice.

The men's team will run a four-mile race without two of its top runners. Freshman Chris Unthank and junior-college transfer Francis O'Neill are not entering the event.

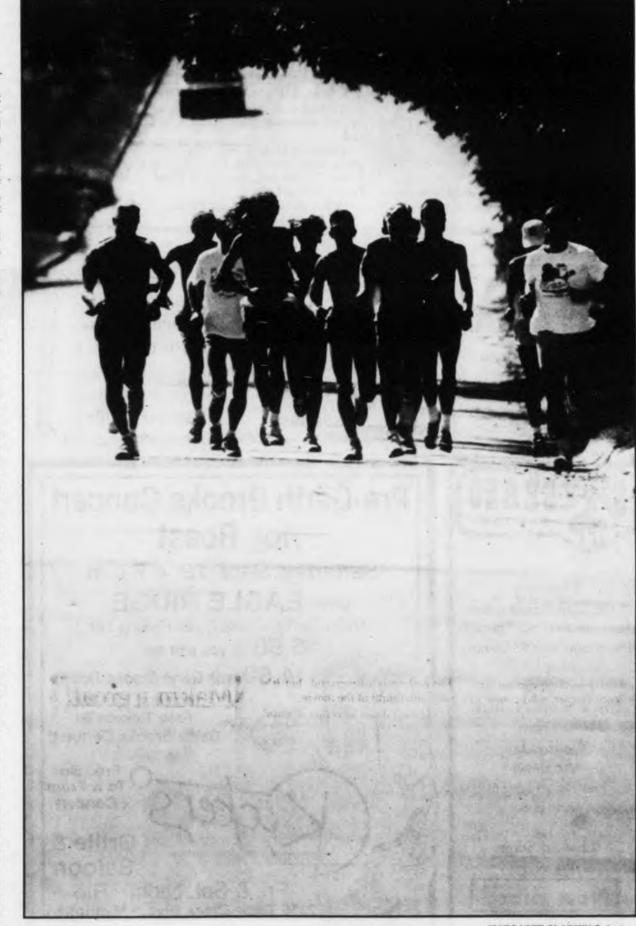

It will also be the first meet in which the team runs without a leader since all-American Todd Trask finished his career.

"We still have a good team," Capriotti said. "In this meet, the runners try to keep together as long as they can, hopefully through the first half of the race, at least.'

The women's harriers will leave injured Janet Haskin and freshman Megan McGrath at home.

Last year, the men's team finished first. In the individual rankings, Trask was second, Mike Becker seventh and Anthony Williams 14th.

The women's team also won the competition with Jeanene Rugan fifth, Paulette Staats seventh and Jennifer Hillier

Women's squad to swing at higher level

KRISTEEN YOUNG

The K-State women's golf team opens its season this weekend in Las Cruces, N.M., with a few new team members and many new expectations.

"When I got here, the women didn't expect much. Now they do," said Coach Mark Elliott, now in his second year as head coach for K-State.

Increased expectations have something to do with the team's fifth-place finish in the Big Eight last season, Elliott said. The placing was the best for a K-State women's team in 16 years.

The reality of the improvement has hit home with the golfers as well, and they hope to carry it throughout the three-day tournament.

"I expect that we will turn some heads this season," said Valerie Hahn, the lone senior on the squad. "Hopefully we will continue to break school records.

If play goes as well in this year's Diet Coke-Roadrunner Invitational as in 1991, records will indeed be broken. While in Las Cruces last fall, the Wildcats broke a K-State record for team scoring in the third round and also for total scoring by

Despite reaching team goals, the Wildcats placed 11th in a field of 18

New expectations are partly the result of a crew of new players. Among them are six freshmen and a sophomore transfer from Las Vegas. Both Elliott and the upperclassmen have already noticed a rise in competitive spirit among team members, Elliott said.

Competing against teammates is necessary for the Wildcats to decide who will play in the upcoming tournament, Elliott said. Who will compete in each tournament varies from weekend to weekend.

Denise Pottle, one of two juniors, competes against teammates in the pretournament qualifying rounds, the same way she would against anyone else.

"The five of us had to play really well to go to this tournament," Pottle said. "You couldn't just shoot anything and go like in the past."

In the past, an average score of 84 or 85 would have gotten anyone to the tournament, Elliott said, but this season, someone shooting that wouldn't make the traveling team. The average was about 81.

Spikers to play 3 teams in Chicago

DePaul tournament next in line on Hagemeyer's improvement list

BRIAN ANDERSON

Volleyball coach Patti Hagemeyer, whose team is on a two-game winning streak, takes the Cats to Chicago this weekend for the DePaul Invitational. Following the invitational, the Cats stay in the windy city to battle Loyola Sunday. "We see progress every time we step on the court," Hagemeyer said. "We got the team ready for this weekend. We want them to play hard every time they are on the court."

The key for K-State is to keep the opposing squad from getting an early lead, Hagemeyer said.

We want to start on the right foot and limit the teams to a quick start," said Hagemeyer, who saw her squad spot the opposing team three- to six-point leads in last weekend's tournament.

Hagemeyer said this weekend's invitational will be more difficult than last weekend's. All three teams in the round-robin tournament, as well as Loyola, have faced stiff competition so far in their seasons.

One of the teams opposing K-

State in Chicago is Western Illinois, 0-4. The Westerwinds lost to Arizona State and Iowa last week, but Hagemeyer said she thinks the team is better than its record.

"They have the potential to do well and can put a good game together," said Hagemeyer, whose team will play Western Illinois today at 5 p.m.

The Westerwinds were 12-13 last year, but they have eight returning letter-winners on a team that tied for fourth in the Mid-Continent Conference.

The second game in the Cats's invitational is against the Michigan State Spartans at noon Saturday. Michigan State is 3-0 with wins over Western and Eastern Illinois and Temple.

Hagemeyer describes the Spartans as a tough team, even though they have already equaled last season's victory total when they went 3-27. The Spartans have eight letter-winners, including four starters, returning this season. K-State will finish the invitational by playing the host, DePaul, Saturday evening. The 1-3 Blue Demons' only win came against Rhode Island, and they have lost to Oregon, Colorado State and Colorado., DePaul finished last season 32-7. Eight letter-winners, including three starters, return for the 1992

FORMER WILDCAT BREAKS HAND

The Pittsburgh Steelers have placed former Wildcat Russ Campbell on the injured reserve list.

Campbell broke his right hand during Pittsburgh's weekend game against Houston. He won't be eligible to play until Oct. 11.

Campbell did not catch a pass in his NFL debut.

Eric Green, the Steelers' starting tight end, injured his shoulder and was also placed on injured reserve as well. He, too, will be eligible Oct. 11.

Tim Jordan will replace the injured Campbell.

CHIEFS FACE SEAHAWKS IN KC

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (AP) -Neither Seattle nor Kansas City expected to rewrite the record books this season with strong offensive machines.

But they did expect to score touchdowns. The Seahawks, in a 21-3 home loss to Cincinnati last week, got only a field goal. The Chiefs got as many touchdowns from the defense and special teams as from the offense.

The two teams square off at noon Sunday at Arrowhead Stadium in Kansas City.

Garth Brooks brings country charisma to Kansas

Saturday performance at Bramlage to feature 2 band members from Manhattan

SHEDERA BAUSCH

Collegian Country music sensation Garth Brooks will come to Manhattan Saturday to tantalize a sold-out Bramlage Coliseum crowd.

Brooks, who currently reigns as the top country artist, has sold more than 9 million albums during his career. He has released three albums: "Garth Brooks," "No Fences" and "Ropin' the Wind," which have helped him win entertainer of the year and video of the year honors.

After paying his dues in Oklahoma honky-tonks for several years and being turned down by recording companies, Brooks' accomplishments are commendable. While his success seems to please him, Brooks hasn't let that ruin his relationship with the audience. He is known for his compassion for his fans, often making appearances after shows to sign autographs and answer questions.

Saturday's show also has a little local interest - two members of Brooks' band are Kansas natives.

Shirley McGill, employee of S Bar J Western Wear and a friend of the pair, said five years ago James Garver ventured to Nashville, followed a year later by his friend

Brooks while he was forming his first band, and as luck would have it, Brooks invited Garver and McClure to join.

Garver, of Concordia, plays lead guitar for Brooks, and McClure, of Augusta, plays a variety of instruments, including steel, lead and slide-steel guitars. Both lived in Manhattan until 1987, playing in a band called Boogie Grass Fever.

The combination of traditional country lyrics with the "new country" sound has made Brooks a big draw.

"People will get their money's worth," Bramlage Director Charlie Thomas said.

Thomas said he was pleased with the arrangements made for Brooks and the ticket availability.

able to get them.

"We have enough demands for tickets to do another show," Thomas said.

Amiee Rieck, sophomore in industrial engineering, said a friend of hers got Brooks tickets by mail

"It wasn't that hard to get the tickets, and they were reasonably priced. I'm really excited about the show. It's going to be great," Rieck

Pesci, Gwynne highlight of 'My Cousin Vinny'

ANDY WOODWARD

"My Cousin Vinny," starring Joe Pesci, is a truly uninspiring comedy about two New York college graduates who are mistakenly arrested in Alabama on the way to graduate school.

Pesci stars as Vincent Gambini, a New York lawyer, who comes to Alabama to defend his cousin, William Gambini, who is accused of murder. Pesci is one of only two positive aspects of the film.

Pesci's character and business carries the film. His role in "My Cousin Vinny" is a lot like his role as Tommy from "Goodfellas" only with a heart.

Fred Gwynne, who played Herman Munster in the 1950s sitcom "The Munsters," delivers a good performance as a Southern judge intolerant of Yankee ways.

Unfortunately, the pleasing aspects of "My Cousin Vinny" end here. Many times, the comedy simply does not work.

"My Cousin Vinny" is two hours long, and the plot takes about 90 minutes too long to gear itself up. The ending is suspenseful, but it's only one-fourth of the movie.

Maria Tomei delivers a good performance as Pesci's love interest, Mona Lisa Vito. Unfortunately, all the talent in the world can't turn around a lemon of a script.

Someone once said if he found himself in a poor film, he would try to slide off camera as much as possible. Don't be surprised if you see Pesci saunter away from the shot every once in a while.

Makin'it great!

NEAREST YOU.

Turning on the faucet is something most of us take for granted. At almost anytime, you can get fresh, clean, cool water to fill your glasses, wash your clothes or fill your tubs.

But before the water reaches you, the customer, it has gone through several processes to make it taste and look better and to make it healthier.

On a normal day, the Manhattan Water Treatment Plant processes between 4 and 5 million gallons of water a day. During a hot summer, that number jumps to 12-13 million gallons a day.

Here is how it happens.

Sixteen water wells pull water from as far as 70 feet under the ground. The wells are located in three well fields. One field is in the Manhattan Industrial Park. One runs along the levee on the east side of the industrial park. And the last runs along the banks of the Blue River.

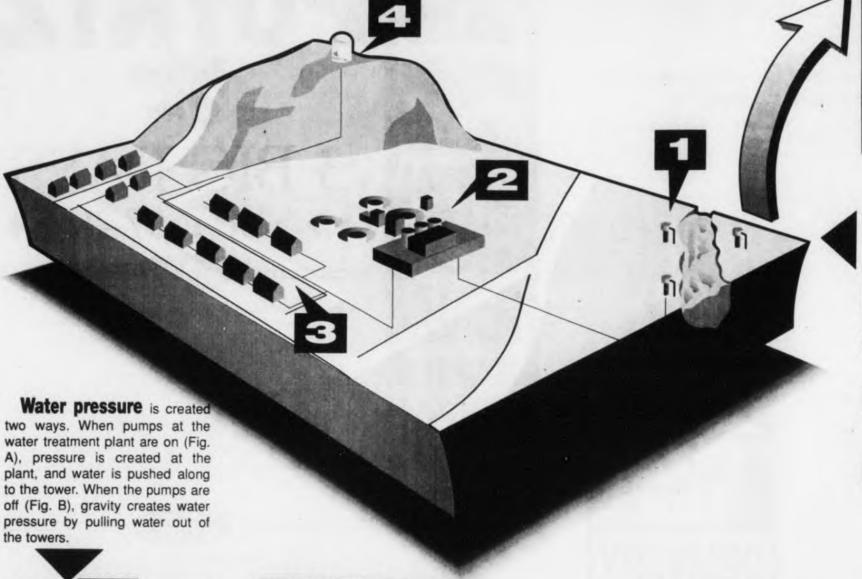

The backbone of Manhattan's water system is the network of water mains and pipes. This, along with four water towers, delivers the water to your homes, businesses and to campus.

Water from the wells is pumped to the Manhattan Water Treatment Plant.

2 At the water plant, the water is treated and prepared for consumption. See below for a detailed picture on how this works.

The water is pumped through the underground network. The network is set up so if a break occurs, usually only a small portion of the town loses water service.

The end of the circut is one of four water towers, called reservoirs. The largest tower is above CiCo Park and holds 2 million gallons of water. The smallest is near Sunset Zoo and holds about one half million gallons.

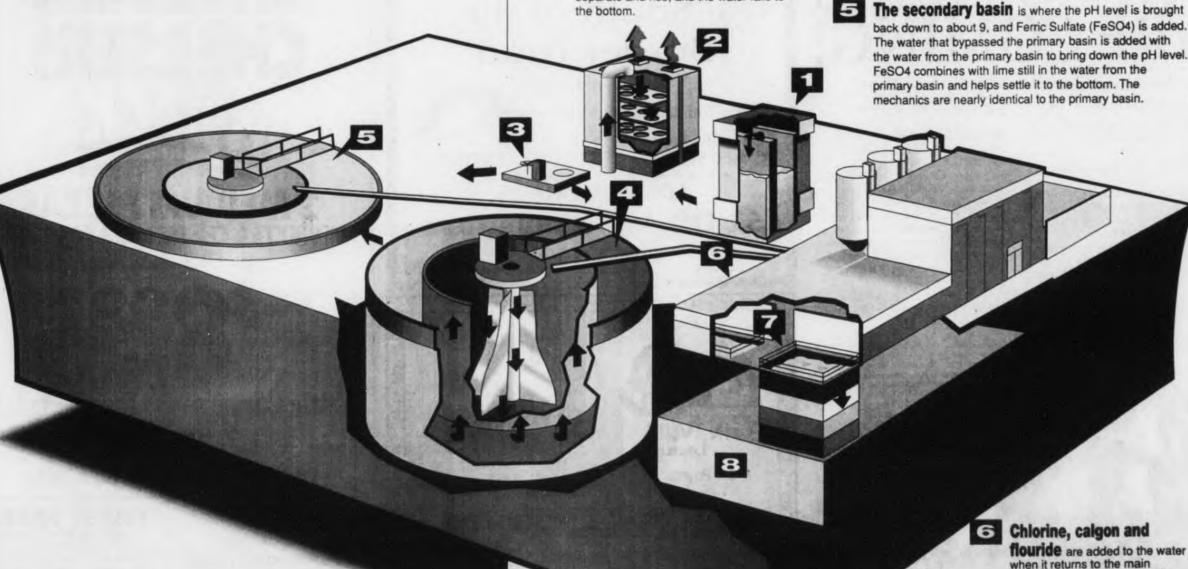

coming in from the wells to the two identical treatment systems. (Only one is shown.) Water enters from the bottom of the tower, is moved to the top and is separated over a wall.

An aerator takes gases out of the water. The water falls through a series of levels with holes in each level. The gases separate and rise, and the water falls to 1 The splitting tower separates water 3 A control valve sends about 85 percent of the water to the primary basin and the rest to the secondary basin.

The primary basin is where lime is added to the water to settle out hardness. Water enters at the top of the inner ring. Lime is added, bringing the pH level to about 10.5, and large blades force the water down. Water reaches the bottom and rises to the top in the outer ring, leaving most of the impurities and lime at the bottom of the basin. The water then goes to the secondary basin.

back down to about 9, and Ferric Sulfate (FeSO4) is added. The water that bypassed the primary basin is added with the water from the primary basin to bring down the pH level. FeSO4 combines with lime still in the water from the primary basin and helps settle it to the bottom. The mechanics are nearly identical to the primary basin.

flouride are added to the water when it returns to the main building. Chlorine kills bacteria. Calgon stabilizes the pH and keeps any hardness in solution form. And flouride is for dental purposes.

Dual media filters clean the water one last time before it goes out to the city. Water enters through the top and falls through five 4-foot-deep filters. The filters, in order from top to bottom, are made of anthrisite coal, fine sand, coarse sand, coarser sand and gravel. There are eight dual media filters inside the main building.

international studies, said Woods has also set a good example for other faculty members and their relationships with students.

"From a student viewpoint, he will be missed," McClaskey said. "He helped portray the image that the College of Agriculture has for being friendly.

"His resignation was a shock. It's very possible that it will have negative effects, but I have a feeling that the other people in the college are very capable of keeping things moving in the same direction.

Though Woods is resigning from his administrative duties, he said he plans to remain an agricultural faculty member in the Department of Animal Sciences and Industry.

Jack Riley, head of the animal science department, said he and Woods have agreed to discuss whether Woods will assume a role in instruction or in research.

"I'm convinced that he's committed to make some great contribution," Riley said. "He's a highly respected professional and was very reputable as a teacher and researcher, even before he got into administration."

Prior to coming to K-State, Woods served in the animal science departments at five different universities, including Purdue University, where he was department head for 14 years. He received his doctorate in animal nutrition from Oklahoma State University in 1957.

Woods' resignation may have caused suspicion about how long he will remain at K-State.

"When someone steps down, you always run that risk of losing them," Coffman said. "Walt Woods has a lot of options. I hope he stays, but only he can decide.'

Woods said his long-term plans are uncertain.

"I do know that the future does not include my involvement with the administration at Kansas State University," he said.

Woods said with a grin that only time will tell if he would ever take an administrative role at another

Senate rejects allocation of funds to retreat

"Every year we come out of our retreat wanting to improve our image with students, and when we have the opportunity to do so, we pass it by," Fertig said.

Sarah Caldwell, finance committee chairwoman, said four senators on the committee had the opinion that the bill should not

"There is a difference between funding a retreat for ourselves and funding a student organization that will attend conferences representing K-State. We did not go to retreat to represent K-State," she said.

Joel Gruenke, graduate senator, said the fact that the bill was being considered after the retreat is not unusual in terms of finances and not a reason to vote against the legislation.

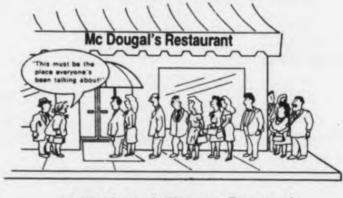

Gruenke said he is against the use of roll-call votes and will oppose them in the future.

You bet it's sexual harassment

I have visited the University of Kansas campus several times to see friends. Why are the people there such snobs? Around here, you can almost talk to anyone. But there, it is

M.B., K-State student

I suspect you mistake snobbishness for the general loathing that has grown over the years between K-State and our sister school, all in the name of tradition and rivalry. There are friendly people at KU also, but to meet them, you are going to have to tell them you are attending school somewhere else. Try Slippery Rock.

DEAR CASSANDRA:

How can a freshman, who's not Greek and doesn't know a lot of people, get involved? Who can they talk to? What is a good resource for them to look for announcements?

DEAR L.S.:

Stop by the Greek Affairs office, Holton 203, and speak with Director Barb Robel. She has friendly advice and loads of information already prepared to answer all your questions.

My boss frequently makes suggestive comments to me and sometimes to the other women who work for him. His innuendo (sic) doesn't seem to bother anyone but me. I try to ignore him and laugh it off, but I'm still afraid whenever he comes into the room. Maybe I'm overreacting, but where do you draw the line between teasing and sexual harassment?

S.L., K-State junior

You draw it right in front of his face. Let your boss know verbally and without anger that the comments you are referring to bother you. In his presence, record the time and date you made this known to him. If he continues to make these comments to you, it is harassment, plain and simple.

Greg Copeland, arts and sciences senator, expressed concern that the national reputation of the campout would be harmed.

"After all the wonderful coverage we've had in national publications such as USA Today, I don't want this to be a black mark on K-State, the campout or basketball as a whole," Copeland

Michelle Munson, engineering senator, also expressed concern that the future of the campout would hinge on the alleged rape and alcohol consumption.

Scott, however, encouraged Senate to put off decisions about the future of the campout for the present.

Family values bill tests Bush's campaign

Proposal ensures worker's leave and tax incentives for small businesses

ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — The House on Thursday sent to the White House an emergency leave bill that Democrats said would boost family values. But the vote fell far short of the two-thirds majority needed to override a certain veto by President

The House approved the measure 241-161 after a debate in which some Republicans said the timing of the measure was a "cynical election-year ploy" to family values as a theme in his re-election campaign.

A top White House aide said there was little doubt Bush would veto the bill, as he did with similar legislation in the Congress.

The measure would guarantee many American workers up to 12 weeks of unpaid family leave a year to care for newborn or sick children, spouses and ailing parents.

As Thursday's vote neared, White House aides suggested to Capitol Hill that Bush might entertain using several hundred million dollars in tax incentives to embarrass Bush, who has used encourage small employers to provide family leaves.

A senior official said Bush would like to provide the tax break to companies with up to 500 employees. Such a program could be financed for under $500 million, the official said.

He said this was the first time the proposal had been presented to congressional Democrats.

Democratic vice presidential candidate Al Gore said Bush's action will test his commitment to family values.

"George Bush has a choice," Gore said. "Either he can change his mind and enact the first measure that Bill Clinton and I are advocating and make it law even before the election takes place, or else he can hold onto the status quo and force Americans to read his lip service to family values." Debate over the meaning of family values and which presidential ticket is most supportive of them has become a central issue in the presidential

"Vote 'yes' if you value families," said Rep. Barbara Boxer, D-Calif. "Surely the president can change his mind and vote for this family-friendly bill."

Rep. William Clay, D-Mo. said, "This bill is about decency, giving working men and women the right to be at home in time of emergencies. Let's vote, and we will see who is opposed to family values and who supports them."

But many Republicans called the timing of the bill politically suspect.

"It is election-year politics pure and simple," said House Republican leader Robert Michel of Illinois.

Michel and many other opponents of the measure said small businesses could not afford the new requirement.

"They will have to cut other benefits; they will have to cut jobs - and how will fewer jobs help the American family," Michel said.

Rep. David Dreier, R-Calif., said bringing the bill to the House floor 54 days before the election is "nothing more than a cynical, election-year ploy by the Democratic leadership falsely trying to portray the president as being opposed to family and medical leave."

BASKEIBALL TICKETS

Tickets will go on sale at 4 p.m. Friday, Sept. 11, in the north lobby of Ahearn.

Sales will be made first to students on the camp out list. ICAT (I Contributed a Twenty, a support group of the athletic department) member campers will have first priority, followed by non-ICAT campers.

Tickets also will be on sale Saturday from 9 a.m. to noon in the east lobby of Ahearn and beginning Monday 9 a.m. to 3 p.m. in the K-State Union.

Students should bring fee receipts to buy tickets.

Larry King live in Wichita

ASSOCIATED PRESS

WICHITA - A murder victim's husband, a frustrated college graduate and a black teen-ager spoke about America's problems on an internationally broadcast town meeting Sunday, moderated by talk show host Larry King.

Mark Magers said his wife and a co-worker were shot and killed April 11 in a bridal shop.

"What does our local government, state and federal government have in mind for crime?" Magers asked.

Gina Weidemann said she graduated from Wichita State University and has had to accept a non-degree job in a chiropractor's office. "I feel like my education was a waste of time," she said.

Rozell Harris, a 19-year-old who dropped out of high school but refused to join street gangs that tried to recruit him said: "Gangs are teenagers like me who need jobs and need to support themselves."

Sponsored by CNN and Knight-Ridder Inc., the 90-minute show was broadcast live nationwide and in 130 foreign countries. About 1,400 people attended the program at the Cotillion, an aging westside ballroom.

King was joined on the bandstand platform by panelists Pat Lehman, secretary-treasurer of District Lodge 70 of the Machinists union; Russ Meyer Jr., chairman and chief executive officer of Cessna Aircraft Co.; Sedgwick County District Judge Robert Watson; state Rep. Darlene Cornfield, R-Valley Center; and Clark Hoyt, Knight-Ridder Inc., Washington bureau chief and former editor of the Wichita Eagle.

A Methodist minister delivered one of the most passionate statements when he blasted the exclusion of people by government leaders. The Rev. Chuck Chipman said he was talking about statements directed at people who disagree on issues like abortion, single-parent families and homosexuality.

"When people talk about getting back to moral values, it means getting back to excluding people who disagree with them," he said, directing his comments at Cornfield.

She drew boos when she said it was an

This time, it's Hawaii

Hurricane Iniki kills at least 3. injures 98 as it batters 'Garden Island' ASSOCIATED PRESS

Hawaii Hurricane Iniki badly damaged 10,000 homes, knocked out the water system and ruined crops on the "Garden Island" of Kauai, an official said Sunday.

A military airlift shuttled supplies and equipment to Kauai, and crews worked around the clock to restore power and telephone service wiped out by Friday's storm.

The island's 52,000 residents struggled to piece their paradise back together. Vacationers waited to leave.

Iniki covered the lush, scenic, 30-mile-wide island with 130-mph sustained wind and gusts to 160 mph - the strongest hurricane to hit Hawaii this century. It was blamed for at least three deaths, including one on Oahu, and 98

Because the storm cut off virtually all communications, details on the extent of the devastation were slow in coming out of Kauai. But after the head of the Federal Emergency Management Agency flew to the island Sunday, agency spokeswoman Linda Sacia detailed the damage.

Survivors were stunned.

"I don't know how we're ever going to get back to normal. I just don't know where to start," said Kathy Cabral of Kalaheo, whose home was extensively damaged.

"We're just glad to be alive today," said Jan Powell of Fairfax, Calif., who was vacationing with her husband in Koloa, on the island's west side, which appeared to be hit hardest - the eye of the hurricane passed over it. The Powells were staying in an elementary school-turnedshelter.

"Guess we'll be staying awhile," Powell said.

Director Steven Spielberg, on the island to finish the final on-location shoot for the movie "Jurassic Park," told ABC major damage. Most hotels were severely damaged.

were down. 7,000 to 8,000 people were in Red Cross shelters.

GREGORY A. BRANSON News: "I couldn't believe the force. We were watching trees fly out of the sky and not come down."

The wind reduced some buildings to splinters and tore the upper floors off others. An entire block was wiped out near Lihue, on the island's most heavily developed, eastern shore. Yachts were piled atop each other in Port Allen harbor. Palm fronds, shingles and other debris clogged roads.

PSYCHO' ACTOR DIES

LOS ANGELES (AP) - Anthony Perkins was remembered Sunday as a clever, mysterious actor whose "Psycho" character Norman Bates made him a legend in the movie industry.

He died of AIDS Saturday at his Hollywood home with his wife and two sons at his side, said his publicist, Leslee Dart. He was 60 and had requested his illness be announced after his death.

18-year-old graduate to attend Princeton

TOM LISTER Collegian

Francis Fung is leaving K-State with his degree at the age most freshmen are entering.

And he's going to Princeton University to work on his doctorate. Not bad for an 18-year-old.

Fung, who graduated in mathematics, left Friday to begin studies at Princeton. For Fung, the trip is part of a long list of accomplishments.

"Should I brag about myself?" he said.

At 2, he was quoting Shakespeare, his father said in a December 1990 Collegian article. By the time he was 4, Fung could read newspapers with minimal comprehension.

Fung said he took College Algebra, his first course at K-State, in 1984. He was 10 years old.

He first enrolled as a full-time student when he was 15. An article in the July 20, 1989, Collegian reported Fung said he would like to make college last at least three

During his three years here, he won many scholarships and awards. In the spring of 1991, he participated in a mathematics program in Budapest, Hungary.

"That was cool - I learned to cook goulash," Fung said. "The math department liked that, too." The list goes on.

Although he was accepted to all the universities he applied to for his graduate studies, Fung said he chose Princeton because of its atmosphere and faculty.

In particular, Fung said he Muenzenberger said that because of Fung's age, it is hard to tell his true potential.

"There's no telling when he'll start plateauing," he said.

Muenzenberger said that in the week before Fung left, he cooked Chinese food for the secretaries in the math department.

Sand sculpting a tradition in architecture

DAVID MAYES/Collegian

Ranch. The competition was sponsored by the K-State chapter of the American Institute of Architecture Students. Contest brings together variety of students

KARREY BRITT

It was fun in the sun, and in the sand, Friday at the 10th annual Sandcastle Charette at the Broken Arrow Ranch.

The event, sponsored by the K-State chapter of the American Institute of Architecture Students, included 11 sand sculpturing teams of two to 12 students. But not all of the participants were institute members.

"The competition has never been closed for architecture students and faculty only," said Wendy Ornelas, AIAS adviser. "It is open to anyone. However, the biggest majority who participate are architecture students.

"It is an important event because it involves all three of the architecture schools," said Tim Hauschild, fifth-year senior in architecture and institute treasurer. "It has become a fun tradition in our college."

"The competition is thought of as a beginning of each year to bring the students away from their studios to socialize and structuralize," Ornelas said.

One of the demands of being a student in architecture is the countless hours spent in studio, Ornelas said. Building sand sculptures allows the students to have competition that puts no limitations on creativity, she said.

Shelah Shanks and Janelle Armstrong, both seniors in interior architecture, work on their team's untitled entry in the Sandcastle Charette Friday night at the Broken Arrow

The creativity emerged as the barefoot sculptors used their shovels, boards, buckets, rakes and bare hands to turn the flat beach into an outdoor art display in less than three hours.

The landscape team was the first to claim a spot on the beach at 2 p.m. Several students said they were concerned about getting a good spot, because the beach was reduced by the large amount of rain this year.

"There wasn't enough beach because of the rain," said Andie Prose, first-year student in veterinary medicine. "There was a good turnout, though.'

At 5 p.m., students began sculpting to reach a theme by dusk, which is when entries were judged by architecture faculty.

Patent process lengthy, expensive Complaints not limited

Students apply for patents; marketability crucial

SHAUNA STITES

Move over, Thomas Edison. Two K-State students who have applied for patents are hoping their inventions will be market hits, too.

Kathy Hachmeister, graduate student in food science, and David Ovadia, graduate student in grain science, are involved in the difficult and expensive patenting process.

"My creation is a fermented cereal-grain product similar to tempeh," Hachmeister said.

Tempeh is a health food made from soybeans.

Hachmeister said she was taking a food fermentation class as an undergraduate when she came up with the idea for her product.

"I thought it would be innovative to develop a food product using grains that are usually used as livestock feeds," Hachmeister said.

Her creation is made from different cereal grains such as wheat and milo.

Ovadia has invented a new bread-baking process, a new kind of microwave, a microwave baking pan and a new method for mixing dough. Ovadia is a food engineer who has had previous experience in

"I see the market trends and think of ideas with commercial potential," Ovadia said.

He said he has been working on his bread-baking process for 10 years, and his other projects for several years. Ovadia said he had to overcome several problems and be

"If you don't believe in your idea heart and soul, you'll be disappointed," Ovadia said. "The patenting process can give you good reasons to doubt yourself."

Hachmeister and Ovadia are working with the KSU Research Foundation to get approval for patents. The foundation helps inventors get patents and market their products.

"The patent advisory council does an analysis of projects that students and faculty want to patent," said John Walters, president of the KSU Research Foundation. "We have to determine if the project contains patentable material. Then we have to see if there is marketing potential for the product. If we believe the project meets these standards, we file a patent application using outside attomeys.

Walters said the patenting

to foreign-speaking GTAs

MEE SUN LEE Collegian

Foreign graduate teaching assistants are not the only instructors on campus who have problems speaking English. Enid Cocke, director of K-State's English Language Program, highlighted a nationwide study done because of undergraduate complaints about the speech of college instructors.

"Half of the complaints were about foreign speakers of English, but the other half were about American dialects," she said.

K-State's policy provides testing and training only for foreign GTAs, under the auspices of the Educational Testing Center of New

Foreign GTA hopefuls either have to pass a test of spoken English in their home country, or a Speaking Proficiency English Assessment Kit (SPEAK) before becoming a teaching assistant.

With the passing grade of the SPEAK test up from 220 to 240 on a scale of 0 to 300, the English Language Program has also taken upon itself to provide in-camp training for foreign students that helps orient them in American classroom methods.

"What we're trying to do is to meet a practical need, to verify that someone's English is good enough," Cocke said. "Someone who has spoken English all his life obviously shouldn't have to do this test. Some people who have immigrated to the United States may have an American passport, but would still not have English as a native language. Those people would have to take the test.

Fire hazards force Seaton to upgrade

Project also helps accessibility

LANE ALLISON

Architecture students have fire hazards to thank for the renovation project in Seaton Court.

The first phase of total renovation for the east wing of Seaton Hall and Seaton Court is nearing completion.

Bill Jahnke, assistant dean in the College of Architecture and Design, said the renovation of Seaton Court, which started in mid-July, is scheduled to be finished by the last week of October. Jahnke said the construction was pushed to reduce inconvenience to students.

"Before the renovation, the rafters were exposed wood, there were no fire doors and the electrical wiring was almost overloaded."

Jahnke said. "Now every exposed surface of wood is fireproofed, every classroom meets within a space surrounded by four-fireproof walls, and there has been an immense

"Also, the doors are connected by an interlock system to the smoke alarms, so when there is smoke the doors lock automatically," he said.

upgrade in lighting and electrical

In addition to the improved fire safety, Seaton Hall is now totally accessible to the handicapped.

The building has been reroofed and insulated to improve heating and cooling efficiency and to stop water leaks that plagued the building on rainy days.

Jahnke said architecture students will benefit in other ways, too.

"The area we utilize in Seaton Court was being occupied by six classes at the same time with no dividers," Jahnke said. "The rooms were used as corridors for students looking for a shortcut through campus, and the area was commonly vandalized, resulting in massive losses in students' equipment."

The new Seaton Court has six classrooms separated by two long corridors.

"This enables students to have their shortcuts without disturbing classes in progress," Jahnke said. "It also provides security, since the classrooms can be locked, and keys can be given to students who use the studios.'

Steve Meyer, senior in interior architecture, said he remembers when the Seaton Hall studios were "mind-numbing and rat-infested."

"When I was a freshman, we fought over desks," Meyer said. "Then you had to watch for people borrowing' pencils, triangles, etc. The roofs leaked when it rained, and it was cold and drafty in the winter. All these things made it hard to concentrate on getting projects done."

The $346,000 renovation is the first phase in a multiphase plan to improve the safety of the east wing of Seaton Hall.

Jahnke said the renovations are paid for by a strictly controlled special- maintenance fund for upgrading building safety.

A reception for all who are interested will be at Ramada Inn Sept. 20 5-8 p.m. For more information about becoming a Founding Father, contact: Steve Bossart at (319) 337-4811 or Barb Robel, Coordinator for Greek Affairs, at 532-5546.

Bush singing same song again

THE ISSUE

President Bush has once again assured America that he will not raise taxes if re-elected.

WE SUGGEST

President Bush should not make assurances that people are well aware he won't keep. Again, we ask for honesty in the campaigns.

"I went along with one Democratic tax increase, and I'm not going to do it again. Ever. Ever."

That's what Bush said to describe the chances of his raising taxes again during a speech to the Detroit Economics Club last week.

Hounded by his "read-my-lips" pledge in 1988, in which he made a promise to not raise taxes and later broke it, Bush is making every effort to avoid another such blunder.

He went a step further, saying the country had been through "economic hell," and that he's the only viable candidate to pull the country out of its recession.

Unfortunately, the country is in a depression, not recession, and Bush is primarily responsible for the joyride through his "economic hell."

Whether the country listens or not, tax increases will be an inevitable part of any presidential candidate's reform package. Bush is living a fantasy campaign if he truly believes he can prevent any tax increases during another four

And, America is tired of listening to promises it knows full well won't be kept, especially when it comes to taxes.

A quick glance in any economics book would make clear that the only way a considerable cut could be made in the national deficit would be to reduce spending and increase

But this is not what anybody wants to hear, and Bush, being a politician of the people, is taking long strides toward keeping these words from ever reaching our ears.

So, the results are all too clear. Either taxes will eventually be raised to begin hemming the deficit, or Bush somehow keeps true to his word, no taxes are increased and the budget grows on

It's the same old story of giving the people what they want, not what they need.

So, Bush, spare the people and dispense with the tax promises.

We all see it coming long before you ask us to read your lips.

Clinton's real closet full of bones

HART

Truth has proven itself to be an elusive issue in the current presidential campaign. Nevertheless, in an effort to strengthen their credibility, Clinton and Bush have, for the most part, veered away from personal attacks regarding extramarital affairs, dodging the draft, smoking pot,

Yet, I believe that Bush, in particular, has made a tragic mistake refraining from "personally attacking" Bill Clinton out of fear of being labeled a "negative campaigner" by the liberal media.

The truth about Bill Clinton needs to be told, no matter how "negative" it might be. If George Bush won't tell the truth about Bill Clinton, I will.

I've heard ten unconfirmed reports about Bill Clinton that the media refuses to talk about. If this won't change your mind about Bill Clinton, nothing will.

1. As part of his national hair-care plan, Clinton plans to liquidate all Apollo hair-care centers nationwide. Socialized hair care will force thousands of balding men to go to government-run hair-care centers. An Apollo spokesman responded angrily, "I thought that hypocrite Bill Clinton was for giving people total freedom over their own bodies! I guess that doesn't include giving bald men their choice of a toupee.

2. Hillary Clinton is encouraging her husband to set up Femi-Nazi camps in the most desolate parts of the nation. Once established, Hillary plans to send all "non-progressive" housewives who have not worked out of the home since the sexual revolution to these for reconcentration camps programming or termination.

3. As part of his welfare reform measures, Clinton will extend welfare benefits to all families lacking a garagedoor opener and cable television.

4. Bill Clinton and Phil Donahue have shared a one-bedroom villa in the Florida Keys for the past fifteen years. Their story will be chronicled in the upcoming CBS movie, "The Last Temptation of Phil Donahue."

5. As part of his national sexeducation program, Clinton will propose that all public schools hand out sexualawareness packets. The packets will contain the standard condom and a brochure on sexually transmitted disease, as well as silk sheets.

6. If Clinton is elected, he will implement his contingency plan to assassinate conservative talk show host Rush Limbaugh with the aid of the CIA and Oliver Stone.

7. The cornerstone of Clinton's environmental policy will not be cleaning up our air and water, but replacing all nuclear and conventional power plants with static-electricity plants.

8. Clinton has contacted the Mexican supergroup "Menudo" about playing state dinners. As a return favor, Clinton has offered to play saxophone on the band's forthcoming album, "Forever Your Boys.

9. As part of his sexual-lifestylerights platform, Clinton will propose an adulterers rights bill. Clinton has said, "I'm tired of people like Ross Perot imposing their beliefs on the public by using marital fidelity as an issue when hiring someone. This legislation will take that power away form fascists like Perot. I mean, come on Ross, get with

10. Finally, it has been reported that Bill Clinton sexually harassed Sen. Ted Kennedy in the late '70s while working at the Capitol. Al Gore deflected the charges by claiming, "If Bill had any desire to sexually harass Ted Kennedy, those desires surely would have been placed upon me."

POLITICS

Electing Clinton a mistake for Kansans

Editor,

It always amazes me that people are willing to make the same mistake again and again. We Kansans, of all people, should know better than to support Bill Clinton.

Sixteen years ago, Americans thought they were tired of a one-term Republican administration and voted in a Southern Democrat who had little domestic experience and no foreign-policy experience to be president. What we got was his double-digit inflation, gas lines and other assorted domestic- and foreign-policy failures. At least Carter held a job during his life - Clinton is just a career politician.

Again, two years ago, Kansans by and large thought they were tired of Mike Hayden. He had failed us on several key issues, supported some unrealistic projects and just didn't seem to be a very good governor - some of the same complaints made about George Bush.

We got rid of Mike and voted in Joan Finney, getting her two years of congressional deadlock, idiotic policies and very poor wildlife commissioners. Overall, she took a mediocre state government and turned it into a nearly worthless state government.

We shouldn't make the same mistake again. No, Bush is not the ideal president, but voting in Clinton is not the answer. Bush can't guarantee no new taxes, but at least he doesn't promise new taxes, as Clinton does. Write your senators and representatives to oppose bills you don't like and eagerly await 1996 when maybe some real candidates will run.

China has no claim over Taiwan nation

Editor,

This is in response to a letter from Shulin He and friends on September 9, about the Taiwan-China relationship.

We would like to emphasize that Taiwan, Republic of China, is a nation independent of Communist China. These two countries broke apart more than 40 years ago. Taiwan has all the necessary characteristics to claim itself an independent

We agree that Taiwan has been part of China in the past. However, it is not so at present. It has never been ruled by Red China and there is no need for Taiwan to be part of it in the future.

There is no point in arguing that Taiwan and China are like the North and South of the American Civil War. Taiwan and China are two separate entities. Some Chinese leaders think that it is their obligation to unify Taiwan and China. They will not hesitate to use armed force to do so. But what good is this going to do? If a couple fights all the time and is separated for 40 years, is it wise to join them again. Taiwan and China have developed so differently over the last 40 years, there would be a holocaust if communist China takes over Taiwan hereafter.

Unless China's government learns how to respect its own people, Taiwan would believe that unification simply means slaughter. Whether Taiwan should be united to China is a decision of Taiwan's people, and should never be forced by the Red Army. We do not want a massacre in Taiwan. That is why we need aircraft from the U.S. for the minimum demand of selfdefense.

Bicyclists need to obey laws as well

Editor.

Encouraging use of bicycles on campus would be in everyone's best interest. It frees parking spaces, reduces traffic and air pollution, and increases physical fitness.

The editorial of Sept. 2 on bikers' needs was timely. But I strongly object to one comment, namely that "riders are forced to chain their bikes to trees, fences and handicapped railings" due to the shortage of racks. This is the same irresponsible attitude that "forces" drivers to park in handicapped spaces or on sidewalks for their own convenience.

Instead of damaging flower beds and trees and using railings, bike riders could find other solutions. Bicyclists already enjoy easy mobility; they should consider what happens when a blind person or someone on crutches comes out of a building, counting on the railing to get down the steps, and finds bicycles obstructing the way.

Incident at campout waiting to happen

I would hope that in the wake of the campout incident, Student Senate would decide to end this system for ticket distribution for good.

Every year that the campout has been held, there have been problems; this latest one was simply the most severe. I realize that the campout does not cause these problems, but it certainly provides an atmosphere in which they are likely to occur. We need to be more concerned with the safety of our students than with preserving the "funfilled" publicity this yearly fiasco provides. We deserve a system of distributing tickets that does not put us at risk.

Productions provide chance to discover talent

Auditions for productions by the Playwrights' Stage will be from 6 to 9 p.m. tonight and Tuesday night in Nichols Theatre.

Playwrights' Stage members are student script writers, directors and

The productions are not very technical, said Judy Mills, graduate student in speech and theater and group organizer. There is only one week of rehearsal, and not everyone is expected to know his or her lines. This leaves the door open for spontaneity, she said.

While most of the people involved are graduate students, theater majors and English majors, Mills said, anyone can audition, no matter what their level of experience may be.

"People can discover their talent by participating in the Playwrights' Stage," Mills said. "It can bring out your potential."

For instance, Jean McIntosh, graduate student in speech with an emphasis in playwriting, wrote the script for "The Ladies of Sharp End," which was performed by the Playwrights' Stage last spring. It has since gone on to full production.

McIntosh said others have had similar success and that the Playwrights' Stage is a starting ground for larger productions. Another script by McIntosh, "The Reading," will be performed Oct.

Nine productions are scheduled for this semester. All will be in the Purple Masque Theater in Memorial Stadium.

Benton to lead special teams

Kicker Wright hoping to return to freshman form

FRANK KLEEMANN

Collegian Special teams of football squads have the tendency to be overlooked. But K-State's special teams' unit has the potential to be one of the top ones in the conference this year. "Our punting game is solid," said Nick Quartaro, special teams coach. "And Andre Coleman and Gerald Benton were both top. people in the Big Eight last year."

Last season, Benton was the team leader in kick-off returns, averaging more than 20 yards per return. Coleman had 12 returns and an average of nearly 23 yards.

Between the two, they returned 23 of 28 kick-offs for K-State last year. Benton also returned punts behind all-Big Eight performer Michael Smith.

K-State's top punter will be Sean Snyder, who transferred from lowa last year to become the 1991 Big Eight Defensive Newcomer of the Year. Snyder's punt average of 40.5 yards was the fourth best in the league, but he outpunted the three punters ahead of him in head-to-head matches.

"Snyder had a fine year and is seeking for improvement," Quartaro said. "We're mainly trying to improve his hang time."

Snyder said he spent the summer strengthening his legs and that it went well.

"I'd like to get more yardage, and even more, improved hang time during the punts," he said. "I think I just need better consistency. Fine tuning - that's what is left to practice."

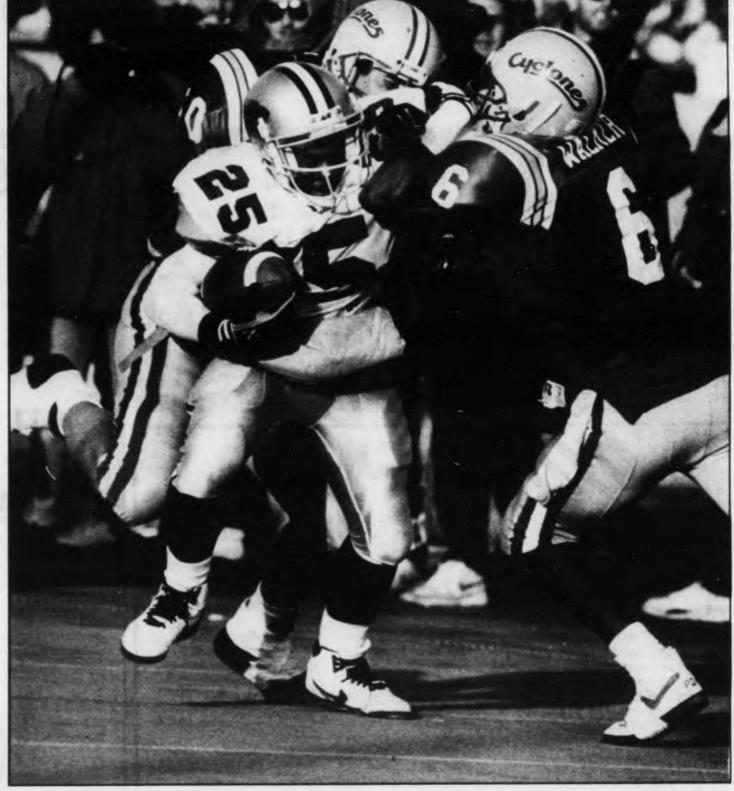

The man for the field-goal attempts will be junior Tate Wright.

"Tate is the No. 1 now coming out of spring," Quartaro said, leaving Warren Claassen behind as back-up kicker. "Hopefully, he'll have a good year. We work on building up his confidence, on the mental outlook. And nothing is better to get confidence than making the first attempts in the game.

Wright started a successful freshman campaign in 1990, making 29 of 31 extra points and eight of 14 field goals, including a career high of 48 yards.

Last year, however, Wright showed a lack of that confidence, kicking for 27 of 32 extra points and eight of 15 field goals. From the medium distance range of 20-39 yards, Wright managed to convert only 50 percent successfully.

But Wright said he's confident his weakness is behind him.

K-State wide receiver and kickoff returner Gerald Benton fights for extra yards during last year's win over lowa State. Benton was the second-best kick returner in the Big Eight last year, averaging 20.3 yards per return.

"I think I've improved my kicking," he said. "I worked on a few different things, but mainly I worked on longer field-goal attempts. I'm mentally ready, just from experience and repetition of kicking practice."

In the ball-returning game, Quartaro said, punt coverage and field coverage as units top the list of workouts for the special teams.

Individually, K-State has two top punt and kickoff returners with Berton and Coleman, backed up by speedy guys Thomas Randolph and J. J. Smith.

Benton finished second last 12 returns last season with an year in the conference with an average of 20.3 yards per kickoff return. He also tied K-State's record of seven returns in a single game against Washington.

One of the factors that contributes to his performances is Benton's speed, which he improved by being on the outdoor track team between seasons.

"Track helped me a lot," he said. "I did a lot of running, and it looks pretty good."

Coleman will be the second top runner on the team. He recorded average of 22.7 yards, which ranks among the top returners in the Big Eight. Coleman's 47-yard return against Northern Illinois was the longest of all league returns last season.

"They have very good speed abilities, and they accelerate very good, too," Quartaro said. "They have the ability to see a crack in the opponent's defense and to go in there as long as the seam is

Of the 116 individuals and 19 teams who took a .9-mile swim, a 9.9-mile bicycle ride and a 3.1-mile run Saturday morning, only two people and three teams emerged champions of the 10th annual KSU

Wildcat Sprint Triathlon. Craig Summers was the overall winner of the triathlon, while Dana Townsend claimed the gold in the women's division. "They're really competitive," triathlon coordinator Jason Bradley said of the participants. "They get out there and work and train for the triathlon. There is a lot of competition with the teams."

The competitors raced around the River Pond area of Tuttle Creek State Park. The numbers were down from last year's 167 competitors and 25 teams. Some of the top athletes didn't come because there was a triathlon Sunday in Kansas City, Bradley said. Participants ranged from ages 17

"I do it to stay in shape," said Summers, a 1980 K-State graduate who lives in Lenexa. "I work out six to seven times a week. I've had to cut down since I'm helping raise my 2-year-old son." Dana Townsend, the winner on the women's side, said she participated in team competition before she went solo three years ago. Townsend, of Manhattan, has finished second each of the last two years in the K-State triathlon.

"I'm not great in any one area, but I'm not weak in any area," said Townsend, who finished with 59:02 minutes, 45 seconds ahead of runner-up Heather Sterbenz. "My biking seems to be the best area, since I'm stronger than most women in this area.

Townsend, 36, works hard to keep in shape.

I run 50 miles, bike 80 miles and swim five miles a week," she said. "Plus, I'm an aerobic instructor."

Townsend finished 15 minutes ahead of Marlene Dietz in the 35-39 age division.

"I haven't had a bad race all year," Townsend said, as she has won four triathlons this summer. "I have competed in some big ones during the summer, and I've always placed in the top four.

"It takes two years to train to get the hang of it. It takes that long to know what you're doing."

▶ RASMUSSEN LIFTS ROYALS TO WIN

NEW YORK (AP) - Dennis Rasmussen wanted to show the Kansas City Royals that he still could pitch, and he did just that with seven shutout innings Sunday. Rasmussen, released by two organizations earlier this season, made his debut a nice one for the Royals, stopping their four-game losing streak and snapping New York's sixgame winning streak with a 3-0

"I'm looking forward to getting the ball next time, whenever that is," Rasmussen

Jeff Montgomery pitched the final two innings for his careerhigh 34th save.

George Brett was hitless in four at-bats, including three strikeouts, and now needs 18 hits in the Royals's last 20 games to reach 3,000.

EDBERG CAPTURES SECOND TITLE

NEW YORK (AP) - Quick at the net and slick with his volleys, Stefan Edberg captured his second straight U.S. Open.

He regained the No. 1 ranking Sunday with a lot of help from a weak and uninspired Pete Sampras

Edberg's end to his arduous route to the title was a 3-6, 6-4, 7-6 (7-5), 6-2 win, a mere twohour, 51-minute victory after three straight five-setters that took a total of 13 hours, 43

"Last night I had a stomach virus," Sampras said. "I got up at 8 this morning. I had stomach cramps. I'm not giving an excuse. I just didn't have enough today."

Squad takes 7th in field of 14 teams

The women's golf team improved each day of the three-day tournament in Las Cruces, N.M., to finish in a tie for seventh place with intrastate

Coach Mark Elliott said it had been a team goal to finish in the top half of the field of 14 teams. Among the competition was national power Oklahoma, ranked in the country's top 20 last season and second in the Big Eight. The Sooners took the tournament from the hosting team, New Mexico State, which finished in second.

The ninth annual Diet Coke-Roadrunner Invitational began Friday. At the end of day one, the Wildcats were in 11th place. By the end of day two, the squad had moved up two places to ninth.

"Things are really looking up," Elliott said. "The women are really showing some positive signs. The team feels somewhat good about the way we finished up. We had one terrible round, one decent round and one good round."

The team's best round came Saturday when the Wildcats posted the fourth-best round of the day with 319 strokes, a jump from Friday's 341

Prior to the tournament, junior golfer Denise Pottle said everyone would have bad days eventually.

"Golf just has to be taken day by day. Anyone can have a bad day, but you just have to be positive and think about the next time," Pottle

After round one, that is exactly what the Wildcats did. They looked to improving their scores Saturday and Sunday.

Sunday, the Wildcats competed in what Elliott called their "decent round." They finished with 331 strokes for round three, enough to raise them two more places to seventh.

The team's seventh-place tie with Kansas marked the first time the women were able to play at an even level with the intrastate rival. The finish was also an improvement from last year's 11th-place finish.

Krieg leads Chiefs past Hawks, 26-7

Kansas City QB hurls for 231 yards against former team

ASSOCIATED PRESS

KANSAS CITY, Mo. - No. no, no, said Marty Schottenheimer and Dave Krieg. They felt no special satisfaction Sunday in the Kansas City Chiefs' 26-7 victory over the Seattle Seahawks.

Still, you have to wonder.

It's Schottenheimer's first 2-0 start in nine full seasons as a head coach. For Krieg, it was a resounding victory over the team that didn't protect him in Plan B after 11 seasons.

"Just winning the game is satisfying," Krieg said. "I don't take any special satisfaction in beating the Seahawks, because I know how much those guys are hurting over there right now.

Krieg completed 13 of 19 passes for 231 yards, including a 72-yard touchdown pass on the third play from scrimmage.

"I've had that feeling a lot," Krieg said. "There is special satisfaction in winning the game, not because it's the Seahawks.

In eight previous seasons in Cleveland and Kansas City, Schottenheimer's teams had split their first two games.

"It's historically true," Schottenheimer said, "but the only thing that means anything is how you stand at the end of the season. It's good to win your first two. That's all."

Krieg's replacement, Kelly Stouffer, completed 13 of 31 passes for 106 yards. With 5:07 left in the third, Lonnie Marts picked off a poorly thrown Stouffer pass, picked up a block from Neil Smith and sped 36 yards for a touchdown and a 20-7 lead.

"It was just absolutely my fault from the start of the play to the end of the play," Stouffer said.

Christian Okoye, who has had some of his best games against the Seahawks, busted through the line for 18 yards on his first carry and broke Ed Podolak's career rushing record. Okoye wound up with 63 yards for a total of 4,501.

CHIEFS ROUNDUP 3

"I had it in my mind that if I touched the ball on my first carry that I should get it," he said. "But that wasn't my focus. I just wanted to play well."

In beating the Seahawks for the sixth time in their last eight meetings, the Chiefs intercepted two passes and recovered two fumbles while losing just one fumble themselves.

"We shot ourselves in the foot," Seattle coach Tom Flores said. "It should have been a lot closer game, I thought. I felt good at halftime because we were in a position where we could have made it a good game and possibly win. But we didn't."

In the first quarter, J.J. Birden, the Chiefs' fastest receiver, darted into the secondary uncovered, took Krieg's pass on his own 40 and outran safety Robert Blackmon down the sideline on the third play from scrimmage for a 7-0 lead

Russian troupe plays McCain

Chorus, dance group performance impressive as well as educational

The Incomparable Red Stars, Red Star Army Chorus and Dance Ensemble was entertainment with a cultural lesson.

An impressive 58-member chorus and 23member orchestra took the stage in McCain Auditorium Sunday afternoon in full military uniform.

REVIEW

To get feelings of nationalism flowing, the group opened with "The Star Spangled Banner" and "Patriotic Song," the Russian National Anthem.

The 20-member dance ensemble was equally impressive.

The traditional costumes for each performance were just as important as the dance itself. The outfits were bright and showy, complete with hats and headpieces.

The dance ensemble performed breathtaking acrobatic tricks, including jumps, turns and "prisadki," the traditional dance in which the dancer alternately kicks forward from a squatting position.

The orchestra accompanied an accordion soloist in an amazing version of Rimsky-Korsakov's "Flight of the Bumblebee."

Along with performing Russian folk songs, the chorus accompanied a tenor soloist in a satirical ballad, "Song of the Flea," which had the crowd chuckling.

Headquarters opens for local Republicans

Community has chance to see party candidates

MATT CUNNINGHAM Collegian

Local Republicans have found a place to park their elephants.

About 50 people attended an open house Thursday night to mingle with local Republican candidates at the newly opened Riley County Republican Party Headquarters at 312 Poyntz Ave.

Siegrid Sloan, Riley County Republican Party Treasurer, said the grand opening was a time for local residents to meet and see the candidates.

Many of the Republican candidates from the Riley County area were at the open house, giving them a chance to introduce themselves to community members.

Several local seats are up for election, including a Senate seat. two Representative seats and many county offices.

Mark Hatesohl, chairman of the Riley County Republican Party, is quite confident with the candidates running for office.

"We have good candidates who've been involved in the community and are concerned with the area doing well," he said.

Although Hatesohl said there's a strong Republican population on the K-State campus, he admits to the stronghold of the Democratic party there. The Democratic Party looks to the University for leadership," he said. "Activists for the Democrats

Some candidates voiced concerns about opinions toward the Republican Party.

The Republican Party stands for something and means something," said Rep. Kent Glasscock, R-Manhattan. "What Kansas means is because of the Republicans. What Kansas stands for is because of the Republicans.

"The Republican Party in America and Riley County never will be in retreat," he said.

The headquarters will be open through the Nov. 3 election with another party scheduled for election night, said Hatesohl. The headquarters will close Nov. 4.

Leaving behind driftwood and other flotsam, waves crash on the shores on Milford Lake Sunday afternoon near Wakefield. Strong winds generated whitecaps and lake wind advisories on many Kansas lakes.

ESSENTIALS

Reader thinks there is a 'double standard'

I think there is a double standard in the male/female relationship. Why is it that if a girl and a guy do the same thing, the girl is right and the guy is wrong?

L.A., K-State senior

DEAR L.A.,

You mean like the double standard where if a man goes out and beds a number of women in one night he is a "stud," but if a woman does the same thing, she is a "whore?"

DEAR CASSANDRA,

I have a friend who's an extensive drug user. When I confront him, he denies he has a problem and becomes angry. How can I help

What you describe is a typical reaction from those who abuse drugs, and it is a difficult hurdle for them to overcome if they are to recover from substance abuse.

Admitting that a problem exists and finding the desire to change it are the keys to recovery. You have shown through your concern (and maybe he will read this column) that you are a true friend, indeed. I spoke with Jane Wheeler, a member of the alcohol and drug education program at Lafene Health Center, and she advised it is best to talk to this person one-on-one at a time when he is not on drugs and feeling calm.

Let him know you care, and avoid being accusatory or judgmental. Your main goal is to keep the relationship "safe," even if he rejects the advice.

However, you must make an honest attempt to point out the problem and the effects it is having upon you and others around him.

Encourage him to go to Lafene when he is ready to admit the problem.

The staff can assess the problem and provide your friend with a referral to an appropriate rehabilitation agency.

Let me know how it goes.

DEAR CASSANDRA,

Are there any rules to the "parking-lot game" that must be endured every day to find a spot? D.G., K-State junior

DEAR D.G., Yes, just one.

"The early bird gets the worm."

Then she immediately turned her attention back to her fishing pole.

"We're from Boston. So, fishing was never on our agenda," said Jeanette's mother, Rosanne Hilliard. "This is all new to her. She's having a lot of fun.'

Nate Wallen, 8, said he liked fishing "because you get to eat it." Then, he turned to go find that perfect fishing spot where he could reel in a big catch.

Others were not so intense. Katie Correia, 7, became bored quickly and left her fishing pole to discover rocks and shells.

"I only like tuna. It's the only fish I like," Correia said, and she went back to hunting for her

"The fishing clinic with Big Brothers/Big Sisters has been going on for a couple of years across the state," Burke said.

This was the clinic's first year in Manhattan.

For individuals under 16, no license is required for fishing. The cost of a resident license is $10.50 and will increase to $13.50 Jan. 1, Burke said.

An alternative was available for participants who did not want to purchase a license.

A 24-hour-fishing license for participants older than 16 was offered for $3.50, Burke said.

"Wildlife and Parks officials hope that youngsters learning to fish will become the next generation to support fisheries management in Kansas," Burke

History draws Daly to Russia

Professor spends summer researching naval archives for book

JANET SATTERLEE

While most professors spend their summers relaxing, John Daly spent the summer researching.

Daly, assistant professor of history, spent five and a half weeks in Moscow and St. Petersburg, Russia, particularly at the Central Government Naval Archives of the Fleet.

He was gathering material for a book on Russian naval history that he hopes to finish in the near future.

Daly said his father was a Russian history teacher, which led to Daly's interest in becoming a specialist in Russian military

Following the coup last August, Daly said there has been a significant change in attitude that has led to the opening of the archives for scholarly research. Getting this access is a big accomplishment compared to 10 years ago, he

However, he said, the western infrastructure for scholarly research is lacking. For example, workers at the archives are not used to foreigners asking for large numbers of copies of a document, and they are unable to handle the daily demand.

Despite the frustration involved in research, Daly said it's an exciting time to do research in Russia and that he and many others in Russian studies never thought that they would have that opportunity.

Because of new discoveries, Daly said Russian history since 1917 will have to be contacts" in Russia and hopes to make a short return either during Thanksgiving or Christmas break, but he definitely plans to spend every summer there until he has completed research for his book.

He has visited Russia three other times, he said, but this time the greatest change in Russian lifestyle was that people were able to express their political opinions and attitudes

"When I was there 10 years previously, it took a very, very brave or stupid person to do that with a foreigner," Daly said.

The West has had a great influence on dayto-day society, Daly said. He noted that Western goods are more available and rock 'n' roll has become popular on a Moscow

If the economy continues to destabilize, Daly said he has made "good initial Daly said the average Russian will equate the current democracy with the freedom to starve, and former party members, military high command and former elements of the secret police may cause trouble.

Some people spoke with Daly about their fear that a fascist coup may occur if the economy doesn't improve.

Almost every night on television, Daly heard talk about the possibility of civil war. He said if the economy continues its decline, it's likely one person with the ability to reverse it would step in.

"It is time for the West to get serious on aid. Not blank checks, but genuine aid," Daly ORGANIZATIONS

"Just Guys," is meeting without women - for the first

Previously, the campus group meetings were open to women until a vote last week barred them. Members decided it was best in order to express their feelings and learn to relate to one another.

"When women started showing up at the meetings, men started clamming up, and they began bragging, fabricating stories in order to impress the women present," said Taylor Mali, graduate student in English and founder

Because of affirmativeaction regulations, "Just Guys" will be unable to use the allocation given by Student Governing Association, cannot reserve rooms for meetings in the K-State Union under the group's name and cannot advertise on campus.

"We may lose a lot of privileges not having women present, but it's worth it," Mali

He described the group's purpose as a forum where guys can talk about problems they may face being a man in the group originally welcomed women, although the posters around campus read, "No beer, no sports, just guys.'

A panel discussion at the Union on "Men in the '90s" jumpstarted the organization. Mali, encouraged by Assistant Dean of Student Life Bernard Franklin, set the foundation for a "men's" organization.

"'Just Guys' has a therapeutic nature," Franklin said, "and my focus is to help guys find out who they are and get in touch with themselves as men, like women do.'

Franklin said he believes

Russians to go grain shopping

$900 million in U.S. farm credits to help flagging prices in Midwest

ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON - The administration announced Monday it will help Russia finance a $900million shopping trip through U.S. farm country awash in Family farm activists say this round of credit guarantees seems designed to cushion falling farm prices across the Midwest, where growers are expected to harvest bumper corn and soybean crops and more wheat than anticipated.

Under the package announced Monday, the United States will guarantee $900 million in private bank loans to Russia for the purchase of U.S. farm products. Russia will also receive $250 million in direct food aid beginning Oct. 1.

Agriculture Secretary Edward Madigan said the package would support more than 30,000 export-related jobs in the United States and nearly $3 billion in total

Russia has immediate access to $100 million in credits and plans to use the money to buy $66 million in feed grains, mostly corn; $24 million in soybean-based protein meal; and $10 million

The remaining credits will be released in installments of $500 million Oct. 1 and $300 million Jan. 1

Deputizing not easy

Youth for Change, a campus organization, was denied deputization to register students to vote last week by Ilene Colbert, Riley County Clerk.

But Colbert said to simply say she refused to deputize students is not fair to her.

"There are problems people aren't aware of," she said.

However, the clerk for Douglas County, which includes the University of Kansas, said students help make her job a little easier.

Patty Jaimes, Douglas County Clerk, said she has deputized several students at different colleges in the county, including KU.

"I have had good luck with young people," she said. "But I know where she is coming from. She has the right to say 'no more'." County clerks are in charge of voter registration.

When people are deputized, they are required to help people fill out the proper forms to be registered to vote, Colbert said.

In the past, her office has had to go back and correct mistakes on the registration forms, and employees are too busy to deal with this, she

Safety group asking for GM truck recall

WASHINGTON - An autosafety group said Monday that fuel tanks in some General Motors trucks are vulnerable to fires or explosions in side-impact crashes and have resulted in 10 times more deaths than the Ford Pinto.

The nonprofit Center for Auto Safety estimated that more than 300 people have died in side crash fires in GM trucks since 1973. Twentyseven people died during the 1970s in fuel tank fires in the Ford Pinto.

"The Pinto is the milestone of gas tank defects," said the Center's Executive Director, Clarence Ditlow. "And when something has 10 times as many fatalities as the Pinto, you know it's terrible.

"It's so high that it dwarfs the Ford Pinto. This is like someone breaking Babe Ruth's home run record by 90," said Ditlow, whose group is financed by individual members and publication sales.

A GM spokesman reiterated the company's position that the trucks meet federal safety standards and the safety needs of its customers.

The center's concerns are directed at "side-saddle" tanks mounted outside the frame rails of 1973-87 Chevrolet and GMC C/K series full-sized pickups. There are about 5 million on the road.

Newer models have a single tank within the trucks' frame rails.

A statistician hired in a lawsuit against GM reviewed National Traffic Safety Highway Administration records and found 115 people died in side crash fires from 1981 to 1986 alone, the center petition asking the highway safety administration to recall the vehicles. On Monday, it called on the agency to grant the request immediately.

Ditlow restated the center's claim that GM covered up the alleged defect.

"GM spent millions of dollars to buy secrecy and keep the lid on this defect," he said.

Ditlow added that the highway safety agency knew about the problem and didn't act.

Asked about the center's death figures, GM spokesman Dave Sloan said Monday that the automaker would stand by its Aug. 19 statement.

"GM believes that its full-size pickups, both current and former models, meet the safety needs of GM's customers," the company said then. "All GM vehicles, including our full-size pickups, continue to meet or exceed all federal motor vehicle safety standards, including the specific requirement applicable to fuel system integrity.

GM also had denied any coverup at that time.

The highway safety administration's acting administrator, Marion Blakey, said the agency didn't know about the potential problem until the petition was filed last month. She said she wasn't aware of a letter written to the agency in 1974 about such an accident in West Virginia.

"We are taking this quite seriously," Blakey said. "It would be premature for me to make any kind of judgment as to the merits."

Businesses, bands join to help pay medical bill

TED KADAU Collegian

A great time and a good cause. The chance to not only listen to some great music, but also help out a guy who needs it.

Two benefit concerts are planned for 9 p.m. Wednesday and Thursday at Brothers Tavern in Aggieville. "Rock for Mike" will try to raise funds for Mike Meier, who suffers from leukemia.

Meier, who was diagnosed eight years ago with Hodgkin's disease, a cancer of the lymph nodes, is in need of a bone-marrow transplant.

"After Mike was diagnosed with Hodgkin's, he spent three years in chemotherapy, the treatments helped, and the disease then went into remission for five years," said Mike's father, Sid. "However, he has since been diagnosed with leukemia and has again been in chemo since May.'

The benefits are needed because the tests and treatments for Mike's disease are expensive, and a compatible donor is still being sought.

"Everyone is doing stuff for Mike. There have been raffles, barbecues and so on. We just feel that we could get him a hefty hunk of change if everyone gets together," said Mitch Ulrich, owner of Vital Vinyl, which is helping sponsor the benefit. "Everything except the bar will go to help him, and everyone is totally donating their time for free, and hopefully we can raise anywhere from $2,000 to $3,000."

The Wednesday-night concert features the Moving Van Goghs, Truck Stop Love and Roach Factory. The Thursday-night show will showcase jazz and blues with sets by Elmo and the Deadbeats, Soup of the Day and Blue with Wayne O'Neal.

"The reason for two different concerts is for two separate types of music and two different types of people. We are really trying to pull in everybody," Ulrich said. "There will be six bands over two nights, with Jeb Bolan as the emcee and playing in between acts.'

Helping Meier is what the concert is all about. However, the effects could reach further than just lending aid to one person.

Youngsters get kicks from martial art

Justin Dyer threaks a board during a tae kwon do demonstration Friday night in Ahearn Field House. Dyer has a first-degree black belt and is a student at Sun Yi's Academy of Tae Kwon Do.

UFM sponsors demonstration

LANA SCHRATER

Teaching and instilling discipline and respect, even at a young age, is a big part of tae kwon

That was the message of Master James Craeton at Sun Yi's Academy of Tae Kwon Do demonstration Friday night in Aheam Field House.

Of the 40 participants in the demonstration, 10 were children.

Students of the Grand Master Chae Sun Yi, from Topeka, put on the demonstration. Craeton, a fifthdegree black belt, teaches a martialarts class through UFM.

"In Colorado Springs, we got to watch the Olympic team, and that is where I really got interested in tae kwon do," said 11-year-old Justin Dyer, son of Stephen Dyer, professor of electrical and computer engineering.

Justin and his father began taking classes when Justin was 7. Justin's brother, Chris, 9, started taking classes at the age of 6.

"My brother and my dad were in it, and it kind of looked interesting," Chris said. Besides performing drills and forms, participants at the demonstration broke square pine boards one inch thick with their bare hands and feet. Justin split a board into two pieces with his foot.

"You hit the board. And then it cracks, and you feel it," Justin said. "It feels kind of weird - kind of tingly.'

Craeton said tae kwon do helps his students become better people.

"Along with confidence comes less of a need to impress other people by doing stupid stuff like drugs, or crazy daredevil kind of dangerous activities that kids get into to impress their peers," he said.

Craeton said teaching children is not much different from adults.

"It requires a little more patience," he said. "You've got to get their interest and maintain it, and that's more of a challenge when dealing with kids."

Other martial arts offered on campus through UFM include aikido, judo and White Dragon

Commission to decide on proposed brew pubs

DAVID FRESE TOM LISTER

Manhattan City Commission will have the second reading tonight of an ordinance allowing brew pubs in Manhattan.

The ordinance provides for small restaurants that brew their own

As it stands, Manhattan zoning regulations provide for a largescale, heavy industry brewery in the city, but they do not provide for smaller-scale operations.

The new paragraph to be added to city zoning regulations defines a brew-pub as "a full-service restaurant that includes an accessory small-scale brewery, which produces a maximum of 2,000 barrels of beer per year.

"Both the brewery and restaurant are contained in a single structure, and all beer produced is consumed on the premises."

This change in ordinances comes from a request by two Manhattan men who want to open a brew pub in the city's C-4 district, or the main business district.

Andrew Allison, graduate student in geography, said he and his partner, David Burchfield, graduate student in microbiology, have been home-brewing beer for four years in Manhattan.

Allison, who was stationed with the U.S. Army in Germany, said the brewery is fulfilling a need he's had since returning to the States.

'There's no place around here where you can get a good dark brew on tap," he said.

He said he is hoping to get the brew pub started by January. The establishment of the Free State Brewery in Lawrence, Kansas' first legal brewery since 1880, paved the way for other state breweries, Allison said.

"I think there are going to be others in Kansas," he said.

Allison said he would like to locate the brew pub in the downtown area and hopes to attract a "laid back" clientele.

"It's hard to find a comfortable place for grad students, faculty, professional military and local businessmen to relax and have a beer," he said.

Eric Cattell, senior planner for the city of Manhattan, said the new regulations will allow for a brewery much like the Free State Brewery.

Cattell said the first reading of the ordinance was approved Sept. 1 after passing the public hearing Aug. 17.

The city commission will also review bids and possibly award a contract for the Manhattan Municipal Airport Terminal Entrance Road Project.

Tuitions rise, but quality lags

ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON - Colleges are charging higher tuition, offering fewer courses and relying more on teaching assistants to instruct undergraduates, a congressional investigation said.

"When it comes to college education, American families are paying more and getting less," said Schroeder, Patricia chairwoman of the House Select Committee on Children, Youth and Families, which conducted the investigation of skyrocketing costs of public collegiate education.

Schroeder, a Colorado Democrat, said it is increasingly becoming the norm for undergraduates to be taught by teaching assistants, not professors, in extraordinarily large classes.

Robert Iosue, former president of York College of Pennsylvania, suggested work audits be done to determine the workload of a typical professor.

"Lawyers clock hours, doctors see patients and perform operations, even truckers log miles," Iosue said.

FOOTBALL

Finally, the time for football has arrived

Editor,

Finally, after a couple of weeks watching other college football teams play on Saturdays, it's our turn to take the field and show America that K-State football is for real.

After a very successful season last year, Cats fans responded this year by surpassing the previous year's ticket sales, which is fantastic, but not enough. Let's make other teams know that when they come to KSU Stadium, we Wildcat fans will be prepared to make as much noise as possible in order to help back the Cats.

Last year we were loud; this year let's be louder. Let's also make it a rule that in order to enter the stadium, you must be wearing something purple. Wouldn't it be great to see a packed stadium with everyone wearing the Cats' colors? Of course it would, so let's start doing it this Saturday night.

Come on Wildcat fans, let's help pump up our Cats. Let's make KSU Stadium a "Purple Hell" for the visiting team. Oh, by the way, I-hear Miami is pretty nice in January.

Question of China-Taiwan dispute moot

We were astonished and disgusted to read the letter in the Sept. 9 Collegian by Mr. Shulin and others, in which they claimed Taiwan is not an independent country, but rather a part of China.

Their lines of argument resemble the official statements often made by the Communist government in Beijing. We are sure that their viewpoints are not shared by the majority of students from China, let alone the students and faculty of Taiwan. Taiwan has been an independent country since 1949. Despite the difficulties of obtaining diplomatic recognition by many countries because of interference from the Beijing government, the 20 million Taiwanese have always had their own government. In recent years, Taiwan has become one of the most prosperous economies in Asia. The democratic political system of Taiwan, while not up to the standards of the United States, is a far cry from the totalitarian government presiding in Beijing today.

Only three years ago, Beijing sent its troops and tanks to slaughter its own people in Tiananmen Square only because the people wanted democracy in China. We shed tears for those slain; we supported those who escaped. We agree with many of our Chinese friends that democracy is the only cure for problems in China, and a democratic China is the only guarantee for stability in Asia and for world peace. For democracy to take root in China. it is essential for the few lucky Chinese students educated in the West to understand the spirit of democracy.

The regime in Beijing has become the biggest threat to world peace. It is then quite natural for the Taiwanese to purchase the 150 F-16 fighter jets to defend their own country. We saw the tragedy in Kuwait and in Bosnia. We want to make sure that tragedy never happens in Taiwan.

We all support the Chinese people's effort toward democracy in China. We will applaud with all our Chinese friends when such a day arrives, but Taiwan must remain for Taiwanese.

Documents give proof of free Taiwan

Editor,

We are a group of students from Taiwan (The Republic of China). After reading the editorial of "Aircraft sale flies for country" in the September 3 Collegian and "Taiwan has and will remain Chinese land" Sept. 9 by Shulin He, we feel we should stand up and say something. First of all, Mr. He had no right to speak for us. Secondly, we think we should let the history speak for itself. The following are quoted from different encyclopedias:

1) "In 1895, as the result of the Treaty of Shimonoseki after the Sino-Japanese War, China coded Taiwan and the Pescadores Islands to Japan." (The New Encyclopedia Britannica, V. 28, 1991, p. 393.)

2) "As a result of the Cairo agreement of 1943, Taiwan was turned over to the Chinese Nationalists government on Oct. 25, 1945, after the defeat of Japan." (Ibid.)

3)"In 1949-50, following the victories of the Chinese Communists on the mainland, a steam on Nationalist troops, government officers...poured onto the island." (Ibid.)

4) "Each claims to be the legal ruler of all China, and each has declared its determination to take over the other's territory." (The World Book Encyclopedia, V. 19, 1988, p. 18.)

In fact, about the past one hundred years Taiwan and Mainland China had direct relations only during 1945-49. For the past forty years, the relationship between Taiwan and China have remained hostile due to the hot and cold wars following. The fate of Taiwan should be decided by all the people residing on the island.

In recent years, the people on the island have had friendly relations with the people on the mainland. We hope the relations will continue and be mutually positive for all.

As a child magician, Tom Mahoney had the most fun getting laughs. Now he's teaching people the magic behind comedy.

Through UFM, Mahoney is teaching a class in stand-up comedy starting tonight at 7 in the UFM Banquet Room.

"I know I watch Carson, see comedians and think, 'I'm funnier than that," he said, "and I know so many others are out there thinking the same thing."

The class will give students a chance to test that ability, he said.

Mahoney has spent plenty of time testing his own ability. He said as a child he went from performing magic to hosting talent shows. There was always a thrill in getting

Tom Hanks, as Mike, narrates the movie as one large flashback of his disturbing, yet enlightening, childhood.

The flashback is a catharsis for Mike, because he explores his close relationship with his younger brother, Bobby, and his role protecting Bobby from their abusive stepfather.

Joseph Mazzello, as the child Bobby, and Elijah Wood, as the younger Mike, convincingly portray a mixture of childhood innocence and forced adult insight, resulting from their stepfather's abuse.

The children know their father's actions are wrong, but they hesitate to tell their mother, who is happy with their new life in California.

The film is set in the late 1960s, before video games and other high-tech diversions were available for children. So Bobby and Elijah escape from their home life through explorations of nearby canyons and adventures, such as fending off the neighborhood bullies.

It is during these explorations that the two children discover a way for Bobby to escape their stepfather. They refer to it as the "Big Idea" and develop it in complete detail.

The movie is much like the two children, in that it is half a child's movie and half an adult Younger children may not understand all the movie's deep concepts, but they will enjoy Bobby and Mike's "Big Idea.

As for the adults, the story might help them remember how a child thinks.

Football buzz abounds in Cat country

For some reason, men get a perverse thrill out of watching other men tear each other apart.

I don't know why, nor do I care. I am one of those mindless psychotics, and I'm proud.

Ah, yes — Wildcat football is back. And the 1992 campaign promises to be different than Wildcat football of seasons' past. For the first time in years, team members and fans alike are mentioning "Wildcat football" and "bowl game" in the same breath.

And well they should. The Wildcats have made one of the greatest turnarounds in collegiate sports history, going from the epitome of football futility to a true Big Eight contender in just a matter of years.

Indeed, just three precious seasons ago the Cats were struggling through a 1-10 year. That one victory, however, was more than K-State had mustered the two previous years, a period of turmoil that resulted in consecutive winless seasons and 21 losses.

But this is 1992. Coach Bill Snyder was approached by K-State president Jon Wefald back in 1989. He was asked to do the impossible - resurrect Wildcat football. Snyder has succeeded. But even after all that Snyder has done for Knobody State. expecting the Cats to dethrone the Big Three of the Big Eight -Nebraska, Oklahoma and Colorado.

But is that really an unbelievable concept?

A year ago, the Cats held the Colorado offense to just 10 points, only the second team in three years to accomplish that. And considering that the sole Buffalo touchdown was the direct result of a Wildcat fumble at the K-State 14-yard line makes the loss look that much more respectable.

And who can forget the Nebraska game? The fact that the Cats played within a touchdown of the Huskers showed the Big Eight that, this time, the Wildcats are for real. And had the final Cat drive not stalled at the Nebraska 7vard line, K-State would have been a serious bowl candidate.

Indeed, the 1991 Wildcats showed that they could indeed compete against the big boys.

And that was just the start.

This year's team is poised to better the 7-4 team of a year ago. And even though the 7 wins were more than any K-State team had piled up for 37 years, look for that win total to go up.

Sixteen starters return from last year's squad. The 1991 defense was the most successful Wildcat unit in nine years. The Cats finished third in the conference in defense, allowing just 17.3 points a game.

Despite the quarterback controversy, the Cat offense should make a bid to defend its secondplace finish in passing yardage with a strong receiving crew. And with Wildcat runners working behind one of the best offensive lines in K-State history, a squad that has helped the K-State offense go from 59.7 rushing yards per game in 1989 to 159.6 last year, the offense could be one of the most well-rounded in the Big Eight. Indeed, the football buzz has begun.

Bowl aspirations are no longer mere illusions here in Wildcatland - they are thoughts of

Cat linemen among best

D-line hungry for QBs

With all the attention on the opposing team's quarterback, many fans overlook the work done by K-State's defensive line at the line of scrimmage.

It's a bit surprising that four football players averaging about 250 pounds can go unnoticed, but sometimes they do.

The Wildcat defensive linemen realize they don't always get attention, but they said that just goes along with the territory. The line consists of a defensive end, two defensive tackles and a nose guard.

"We aren't the glory position," defensive end Reggie Blackwell said. "That is understood by all of us. But we do get recognized when we tackle for a loss or make a sack.

They are, however, being noticed more often. They turned heads last season when they allowed the fewest yards and points in nine seasons by a Wildcat line.

Most of those players are back this fall. With all but two starters returning to the defensive line, the Wildcats rely on experience.

And experience is on their side.

The roster is loaded with seniors as starters and on the two-deep list. Of the top eight in four positions, six are seniors, and most of them have started for at least two

"Having the guys around who have played for three years will hopefully get us to a higher level of play," said John Hendrick, defensive line coach.

Hendrick said accomplishing a higher level of play means improving on some specifics. Pass rushing and getting out of blocks better to make plays have been the focus during practices.

Players have set individual goals as well.

"It's my last year," said Sean Dabney, senior defensive tackle. "My goal is to play well enough to have no regrets and to give 100 percent each time I play."

Other linemen say they look forward to being up against opposing quarterbacks

"It's a race to the quarterback," said Ekwensi Griffith, senior defensive tackle. "Everyone is hungry and wants to get there

One player making big plays behind the line is senior defensive tackle Jody Kilian. As a junior, Kilian tied with senior Elijah Alexander to lead the team with most tackles behind the line with eight.

The other senior lost was nose tackle Evan Simpson.

'It's hard to replace Evan, because he was a leader up front," Hendrick said. "But we have had Jeff Simoneau come in and play at a high level."

Jeff Simoneau is a senior transfer from Arizona State and had to make some drastic changes in his playing position.

A fullback all his career, he has quickly acquired the knowledge needed to play nose tackle, Hendricks said. "They are two very different positions," Hendricks said. "One common quality needed for both is

"Tenacity is needed for blocking as a fullback, and it is needed in defeating a block at noseguard," he said.

Defeating blocks is what gets the most attention for a defensive linemen, but getting noticed isn't the most important thing to these linemen.

'We do go unnoticed, but if we do our job correctly, we are doing something,"

Ekwensi Griffith, K-State senior defensive tackle, gets a grip on a Colorado ball carrier during the Wildcats' loss to Colorado last year.

Neujahr heads experienced offensive line

BRIAN ANDERSON

The cupboard is not empty on the offensive line, even though the Wildcat football team has lost many key starters from 1991. The Cats lost one starter and two other lettermen off the line that ranked second in the Big Eight and 38th nationally last year.

"We have some depth and everyone is capable of playing," said junior Quentin Neujahr, who ranks as one of the best centers in college. "We have worked hard to improve the line."

With seven returning lettermen - four starters and one part-time starter - the linemen have set higher goals for themselves.

'We want another 2,000 yard number of sacks in half," Neujahr said. "We can't underestimate anyone. We need to control everyone and prove we're worthy. The 1991 offensive line made history when it became the second team in Big Eight history to have a 2,000-yard passer and a 1,000-yard rusher as it helped K-State gain 4,231 yards.

"There are seven to eight linemen that we feel comfortable with," said John Latina, offensive linemen and running game coordinator. "Plus, there were two or three others that showed that they could play last spring."

Neujahr anchors the offensive passer, another 1,000 yard rusher, line at the center position. He was tackle Mike Orr. Orr had played to be consistent and cut the named to the second-team all Big at left tackle last season, but he wwe want Eight squad last season. Neujahr has started all 22 games since his freshman year.

Neujahr said his success comes from offensive guards Eric Wolford and Toby Lawrence.

Wolford is a two-year starter who played at the right guard last season after playing the 1990 campaign on both sides of Neujahr.

Lawrence, at 6 feet 5 inches, 295 pounds, is the biggest offensive lineman on the squad. He won the left guard position last spring and started all 11 games. The senior split time at left and right tackle during as a sophomore. Another two-year starter is right moved to the right side to spot vacated by starter Doug Grush. Left tackle is being filled by two linemen, Josh Kolb and Barrett Brooks. Kolb served as back-up to Wolford last season as he played 10 games, missing only the Iowa State game.

Brooks became a starter late in the season as he started against Iowa State and Missouri. He helped the Cats roll-up 932 yards in each of those starts.

Back-ups expected to get some playing time are tackles Jim Hmielewski, David Squires, Eric Clayton and center Jeff Smith, Latina said.

Water ski team takes 2nd at tourney

FRANK KLEEMANN

CLUB SPORTS

The K-State water ski club got its feet wet Saturday and Sunday at the Second Annual Big Eight Water Ski Championships in Lawrence.

The weekend's championship was the test event for the regional championships Oct. 3-4 in Warsaw,

K-State competed in the field of four schools with Kansas, Oklahoma State and Iowa State. The Cats finished second behind KU, leaving Oklahoma State and Iowa State third and fourth, competition. respectively.

Erica Milligan, club spokeswoman and junior in prepharmacy, said the runner-up position was a good start for the upcoming events. "There was some tough competition, but it was an excellent practice for the regionals," she said. In the individual standings, K-

State could place two of its members in the top rankings. Casey Koehler won the men's jump event and finished second in the trick

On the women's side, Jill Dwyer captured two third places in the trick and jump events. Despite the small number of individual skiers who placed in the top three, club member Michelle Haupt said it was still a team effort.

"There were many of our 20 members who placed fourth or fifth in the different events," she said. "The depth of the skiers on both the men's and women's team added 'enough points to give us the second team overall place.

"Even though not many people placed, it was a good opportunity for our new skiers to get some experience," said Kirsten Lundgren, junior in horticulture.

After this tournament, the team's entire concentration will switch over to the preparation of the regionals, where the team wants to qualify for the national championships. A team finish among the top two will give K-State the ticket to the championships, starting Oct. 31 in Louisiana.

RUGGERS WIN IN SEASON DEBUT

The women's rugby team picked up from last season's 10-2 record with a come-frombehind 16-10 win over Arkansas Saturday in Pittsburg,

The Lady Razorbacks scored all 10 points in the first half with two tries, worth four points, and two 2-point conversions. The Lady Cats could only get one try and a conversion and trailed 10-6 at K-State shut out Arkansas in the second half as the Cats tallied 10 points to get the win.

"It was a good win for us," said LaDonna Grenz, team president and coach. "We got some rookies that gained experience. They were shaky in the first half, but they settled down in the second half." It was K-State's third-straight triumph over the Lady Razorbacks after winning both games last year.

ORIOLES SQUEAK PAST ROYALS

BALTIMORE (AP) - Cal Ripken ended his 73-game homerless streak as the Baltimore Orioles beat the Kansas City Royals 2-1 Monday night and closed within four games of first-place Toronto.

Ripken, the defending American League MVP, entered the game in a 3-for-29 slump that had dropped his batting average to .239. But he went 3 for 3 off Rick Reed (2-7), including his first home run in 292 at-bats since June 23. The solo drive to center, his 11th of the season, gave Baltimore a 2-0 lead in the sixth. Gregg Olson finished the fourhitter for his 33rd save. George Brett went hitless in four at-bats and is now 18 hits shy of the 3,000 mark with 19 games to play.

Marino lifts Dolphins past Browns in Miami opener touchdown passes to Michael winning touchdown, setting it up

ASSOCIATED PRESS

CLEVELAND - The Miami Dolphins gave hurricane-weary south Florida a welcome distraction Monday night, overcoming a furious Cleveland rally and beating the Browns 27-23 on Mark Higgs' 1-yard touchdown plunge with seven seconds left.

Dan Marino drove the Dolphins 84 yards in 68 seconds to the with passes of 22 and 18 yards to Fred Banks. A roughing-the-passer penalty was tacked onto the first reception.

Higgs' touchdown, his second of the night, wrecked Cleveland's three-touchdown fourth quarter. The Browns, trailing 20-3 early in the quarter, came back to lead 23-20 on David Brandon's 32-yard fumble return and Bernie Kosar's

Jackson and Mark Bayaro,

Bavaro, who missed all last season with a knee injury, caught the go-ahead pass on Kosar's dumpoff with 1:18 to play, setting the stage for Marino's heroics.

The Dolphins' scheduled opener against New England was postponed last week while south Florida struggled to recover from Hurricane Andrew, which ravaged the area south of Miami three weeks ago. The extra week off didn't seem to bother Marino, who used some of his free time to help his teammates distribute food and supplies to hurricane victims. He completed his first seven passes, including a perfect 25-yard scoring pass to Mark Duper and a 45-yard pass to Robert Clark that set up Higgs' 7yard TD run.

eague says system often exclusionary Clerks differ on

ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — More than a dozen states have voter-registration systems that keep people out of the election process, a spokesperson from the League of Women Voters said Monday.

"The worst states have confusing, cumbersome and inconvenient voter-registration requirements which actually block citizens from participating in our electoral system," league President

The league supports the National Voter Registration Act, which would streamline and reform voting procedures. President Bush vetoed the legislation on the grounds that it would invite fraud, but Congress is expected to try to override the veto

The league said the states with the worst registration systems are Alabama, Arkansas, Florida, Georgia, Indiana, Louisiana, Massachusetts, Missouri, New Hampshire, Oklahoma, South registration at government agencies Dakota, Virginia and Wyoming.

It said the best states are Maine, Minnesota, Oregon, Texas, Wisconsin and the District of Columbia.

Few states have adopted all the measures the league recommends. The measures are registration by mail, "motor-voter" programs that tie registration to drivers' license applications and renewals, registration at schools and unemployment offices, and and agencies serving the disabled.

Mail registration is used in 28 states besides the District of Columbia. Some type of motorvoter registration exists there and in 34 other states.

Some of the barriers cited by the league include restrictive hours, inconvenient and hard-to-find registration sites, restrictive deputization requirements and inadequate notification of those who are purged from the roles.

work," she said.

Colbert cited a student in the past who was deputized and scheduled a voter-registration drive for two days. When the first day proved to be less than expected, the student opted to not show up for the second day of registering.

"This all reflects back to our office," she said.

Mary Farmer, legislative affairs director for Student Senate, said another voter-registration drive is scheduled for Saturday in Triangle Park. Students will be able to fill out information cards that will be sent to Colbert's office, and they will receive registration forms back in the mail.

Jaimes said KU students will have voter-registration drives in early October and at a couple of football games.

Jaimes said she used to go to universities herself for registration drives but decided to contact educational people to deputize

"It helps me a lot," she said.

Colbert said she believes she has made every effort to make voter registration easy for students by deputizing an individual in the Student Governing Association office in the K-State Union. Colbert's office plans to have a campus voter-registration drive through that office later this month.

Voting, Colbert said, is a privilege everyone should take advantage of, but she said only about 75 percent of those registered will vote.

Farmer said she believes if students will prove to Colbert they'll vote, then Colbert will "Colbert said students should have their own initiative to go to SGA and register there," she said.

BILL WATTERSON

2 readers blast Cassandra's advice

DEAR CASSANDRA.

The best word I can think of to describe you is rude. Did you ever stop to think that these people really want or need advice?

Your response to J.W. (Sept. 10), whose friend needed financial assistance, was uncalled for.

Did you ever stop to think that she already has a job? I doubt it.

It seems to me you don't stop to think at all, especially about people's feelings. I have some advice for you - find a new job! J.S., K-State senior

So, does that mean you are offering J.W. an interest-free loan, or maybe even a handout? If so, how do I apply or qualify for financial aid like that?

If J.W. already has a job, then she needs to get another, because I do not believe there is an institution anywhere that is going to give or lend money to someone simply because their parents are divorced and can no longer support a healthy, non-minor

However, I think I made that clear the first time. And the advice was free. By the way, this is job No. 3 for me. If it doesn't help me meet all my financial obligations, then I will indeed "find a new

DEAR CASSANDRA,

I agree with the graduate student who wrote you. You need to keep your attitude toward males out of the paper. As to what you told Horny and Single (Sept. 2), you are completely wrong. First of all, the man was not asking for your opinion of one-night stands, or what you thought of men, or women (Yes, women enjoy onenight stands, too.), who look for one-night stands.

It is very obvious from the tone of both of your columns that you are a female chauvinist pig. You say women probably showed men how to rub two sticks together. Well, it was a woman who brought the forbidden fruit to Adam.

I do agree with you on two points. One is the fact that you do need to make it perfectly clear beforehand that you do not want a relationship.

Secondly, I agree with your point about AIDS. While a condom is not going to protect anyone fully from AIDS, safe sex is the only sex to have in the 1990s.

Lastly, your comments about violence have no place in this column. Not all women, or men for that matter, will react with violence. Most will simply take it with a grain of salt.

S.W., K-State student

DEAR S.W., Unfortunately, that is exactly what women have been doing for thousands of years - taking it, as though they do not deserve anything better.

While at K-State, he was a member of a campus comedy group. Mahoney said the group performed at Homecomings and in local bars.

Mahoney went on to graduate from the University of Kansas with a degree in film studies. For years after that, he said, he led two lives corporate executive by day and stand-up comic by night.

Because of his corporate job, he traveled extensively, so he took his comedy with him. Once he opened for Jerry Seinfeld at the Comedy Workshop in Austin, Texas.

After being transferred to Florida, though, he'd had enough of "Florida is a strange place," he said. "There's no real trees, just big

Mahoney decided to move back to Manhattan, but he said he missed comedy and wanted to get back to it via the workshop.

Students in Mahoney's class will have a chance to adapt to what may be a drunken audience. He said the end of the class will be marked by public stand-up routines.

committee listened and rated each audio entry, tallying the votes to compile the final list of competing bands, Fields said.

"Every band could have conceivably been in OPUS," he said. "The quality of this year's entries was the best I've heard in three years."

There are currently two judges lined up for Thursday's event, and Bailey is looking for two more.

"I'm just trying to think of people who might have a musical mind," she said.

Bailey said bands will be judged for their music originality, vocal and instrumental ability, stage presence and delivery, and audience

The bands' performance order will be determined by lots drawn before the competition, and the winner will be announced after the last band plays, she said.

Fields said he believes the biggest attraction of OPUS is the exposure it provides for bands.

"Most of these bands are just looking to play in front of a lot of people," he said.

KSU housing costs lowest in Big Eight

Price linked to options; universities differ in residence hall services available

MEGAN MULLIKIN

The cost of K-State's on-campus living is the lowest in the Big Eight. But other schools offer options not available here.

When it comes down to cost, it is difficult to look at universities' individual aspects, said Bob Burgess, assistant director of Housing and Dining Services.

"Comparing across the board is hard to do," Burgess said. "You must look at the institutions as a whole.

The size of the rooms, location on campus, cable television and other added extras play a part in the differing cost of residence-hall

At the University of Missouri, for example, the traditional double room costs $3,160. However, with air conditioning, a swimming pool and a newly renovated room, the cost goes up to $3,886.

Almost all halls offer local telephone, laundry service and at least 20 meals a week. At the University of Oklahoma, several meal plans are offered.

Debra Baker, OU's associate director of housing, said the most popular meal plan includes 12 meals a week and a $200 meal card

Though the rates are cheapest here, K-State had the second highest increase this year.

Burgess said when his office decides the cost for a year, it looks only at what the halls need to operate properly - what the financial requirements are.

"We don't really compare the costs to other schools in the Big Eight. We look at the bottom line, and we see where we need to be to have a balanced budget," he said. "Other schools might not have the same requirements for money as we have, like money in the reserves."

Four of the Big Eight schools' residence halls are not at capacity level: K-State, the University of Kansas, Oklahoma State and the University of Nebraska. Some are as low as 75-percent full.

Burgess said K-State is under capacity mostly because of a decline in incoming freshmen. He said statewide numbers are down for high-school graduates, which decreases the demand for space in the residence halls.

Many housing directors said traditional residence hall living is should. He sits in on the group and advises as necessary.

'Just Guys' just not right with women at meetings

"In the process of the meetings, the tone became much different with women present. The men were trying to impress the women at the meetings, which wasn't our focus," Franklin said.

Mali said when guys try out their feelings, they must try them on first to see how they feel.

"It's a process of trial and error. Men don't recognize their feelings as accurately as women," Mali said.

The group's future intentions are to teach men to realize the full potential of their male relationships. Mali said women seem to have the ability to develop close-knit relationships and outwardly prove it by hugging and touching in public, whereas a man's sexuality is questioned if he shows physical affection toward another man.

"The guys were having a much harder time talking with women present, and the whole purpose of the group was for men to learn how to relate to one another," said Melissa Shaver, freshman in literature and former member of "Just Guys." Shaver said it was was a good idea women were not going to be allowed to attend the meetings. "They need their own group, because there are plenty of groups with just females," she said. Mali said the advantage of having women present at the meetings was to get a woman's point of view, but men must first deal with each other.

School districts file suit

ASSOCIATED PRESS

TOPEKA - Nine southwest Kansas school districts sued the state Tuesday, claiming the 1992 school finance law is unconstitutional.

The districts said the law was problematic in the issues of local control, fairness of taxation and equality of education for children in sparsely populated areas.

'The act is unconstitutional in that it contravenes and destroys the concept of local control of local schools," the petition says.

The petition also states, "School districts are no longer able to design their own budgets, levy their own taxes, collect their own taxes and manage their own systems."

The lawsuit says Kansas has had local control of public education for more than 100 years.

In addition, it cites a 1966 amendment to the Constitution which says schools "shall be maintained, developed and operated by locally elected boards."

The new law is illegal because the state now dictates how much local boards can raise and spend, according to the petition.

It is the third lawsuit brought within the past month challenging the new law, which took effect July 1. The Blue Valley and Burlington school districts also have asked the courts to

The districts involved in Tuesday's lawsuit are Rolla, USD 217; Lakin, USD 215; Hugoton, USD 210; Ulysses, USD 214; Moscow, USD 209; Satanta, USD 507; Holcomb, USD 363; Johnson, USD 452; and Elkhart, USD 218.

"The real benefit is saving time for students."

KEITH RATZLOFF

LIANA RIESINGER

Students may not have to wait in long lines to pay fees next fall.

The administration is studying a plan that would change fee payment. The new system would eliminate the hassle of waiting in line at Ahearn Field House for financial aid.

Controller Keith Ratzloff explained that the switch in the fee-payment system would be a two-stage process.

"Our first initiative is direct application of financial aid," Ratzloff said.

Students' financial aid would be applied directly to their fee statements. When they pick up their bills, the financial aid would already be applied toward the cost of tuition and fees, leaving the owed difference.

Ratzloff said this system would be more efficient.

"The real benefit is saving time for students," he said.

Ratzloff said he hoped to see the first stage in place by fall 1993. The second stage would allow for fee payment by mail. Based on what they enroll in during preenrollment, students would receive bills for tuition and fees during the summer. They could then simply pay through the mail.

How students apply for financial aid would not change with the pay-by-mail system. But how they receive the aid would, said Larry Moeder, director of the Office of Student Financial Assistance.

Students could have financial aid already subtracted from what they owe.

Otherwise, Moeder said, students will have the amount of financial aid automatically transferred to their accounts in August. The University of Kansas tried out a similar program for the first time this fall. Shelly McConnell, KU senior in journalism, transferred there from K-State last "Overall, K-State has a better system of paying fees because it has a logical progression, whereas at KU you are wandering around aimlessly having to figure things out for yourself," McConnell said.

She explained the system is inefficient for students like herself who receive financial aid. Because the fee statement is sent in mid-

July, checks must be submitted by Aug. 3. McConnell said because financial-aid checks do not arrive before the fee bill does, students must wait for reimbursement.

She said the payment by mail forces students to pay fees much earlier than the old system. Many students who spend their summers working to pay for their education must pay fees before the last few weeks of summer earnings come in.

"Overall, students were pleased with the new system, except for those receiving TWO BIG CHANGES

If the plan goes through, students will see two big changes someday when it comes time to pay

- Financial aid would be directly applied to tuition and fees. Students would only have to pay the balance.
- Based on what they pre-enrolled in and how much financial aid they received, students would get a bill during the summer they could just pay by mail.

financial aid," she said.

Ratzloff said if the direct application of financial aid - stage one - could be in place by fall 1993, payment by mail could begin the following year.

Pat Bosco, vice president for institutional advancement, said, "We are trying to move as quickly and as prudently as we can."

Despite resigning, Deyoe still in charge

A K-State department head convicted of sexual harassment last year was reinstated as interim head on the day of his resignation and continues to serve in that position.

Charles Deyoe, head of the Department of Grain Science and Industry, along with the University, was found guilty of sexual harassment against his former administrative assistant, Carla Campbell, on Dec. 18, 1991.

Walter Woods, former dean of the College of Agriculture, said the decision to reinstate Deyoe as department head was the result of faculty input. "When he asked for a reassignment, there was not sufficient time at the time of the request to get someone for the job," Woods said. "We went to the faculty, and they strongly recommended Deyoe, along with one other individual, for the position. That individual was asked, and he said 'no,' so we asked Deyoe to continue as interim department head."

Woods declined to name the other individual considered for the position.

According to the April 8, 1992, Collegian, U.S. District Judge Frank Theis ordered the defendants in the case to pay $1 plus attorney fees. The court found K-State guilty because it is liable for Deyoe's actions.

He was also found guilty of battery and assault, and he was ordered to pay $5,000 in punitive damages and $77 as restitution for Campbell's psychiatric expenses.

In the same article, a memorandum and order of the case stated that on Dec. 22, 1987, Deyoe slapped the plaintiff on her buttocks as she was leaving Shellenberger 03K, resulting in enough physical contact to cause her skin to sting.

According to court documents, Kim Hoffman, Deyoe's former secretary, said the department head had said more than once that he felt like hitting her on the buttocks. And March 24, 1986, he asked about her sexual preferences. Hoffman resigned, however, with only a voluntary

Club to sponsor radio fox hunt

Participants

to track transmitter hidden on campus

MIKE BUNCH

Collegian A fox hunt, usually a society event in England, will be sponsored at K-State by the Amateur Radio Club.

But the fox won't be alive.

Instead, participants will use radio equipment to search for a transmitter hidden somewhere on the K-State campus. The event will begin at 10:30 a.m. Saturday in the metered parking lot south of the Union.

"It is sort of a sporting and competitive event," club adviser Norm Dillman said. "We use directional antennas to track down a hidden transmitter."

It is a sport with practical value, Dillman said.

"Participants learn how to track down signals for a variety of purposes, like emergency situations or interference on a frequency," he Dillman said the club is believed to have started on campus in 1927. The only requirement to join the club is having an amateur radio license to use club equipment.

'Amateur radio has been around as long as radio," Dillman said. "Right now, we have about 15 active members in the club."

Amateur radio is more than just a shortwave radio. It includes amateur television, radio-controlled models and space communications.

"We have a club station on the roof of Seaton Hall where we can do a wide variety of things," Dillman said.

"Everyone has a different reason to do amateur radio," said Tracy Tipping, physics research assistant and club member. "I got into it because of my interest in emergency services and my involvement with the severe weather service."

The club and amateur radio operators are involved in several activities during the year.

"During the summer we have field days," Dillman said. "We go out and set up a transmitting station under emergency situations. We try to see how quickly we can get set up and on the air."

Amateur radio allows the user to do more with the equipment than regular radio or television.

"The FCC (Federal Communications Commission) allows you to customize your radio equipment any way you want," Tipping said. "A lot of the changes in radio have come from ideas amateurs thought up."

Old Stadium dedicated to veterans

Metal braces that once held bleachers, that in turn held K-State fans, now dot the otherwise empty concrete tiers in Memorial Stadium. The stadium is dedicated to Americans who died in World War I and was intended to be an arena for physical contests.

Students, faculty raised money for stadium

MEGANNE MOORE

A buzz could be heard throughout the packed auditorium.

There was silence as the audience of 2,000 listened attentively to the powerful, inspiring speech K-State football coach Charles Bachman gave on the morning of April 25,

"You all know that whenever you wanted a thing, and you wanted it hard enough, you got it," he said.

After this, students flocked to raise money for something to call their own - Memorial Stadium.

These days, we call it Old Stadium. But then, it symbolized the determination and spirit of those who served in World War I.

During the four weeks prior to Bachman's speech, about 500 students had been working as committee members to get the concrete foundation started for the stadium.

According to the Feb. 1, 1923, issue of the Kansas State Agricultural College Bulletin, Bachman said, "I want this stadium, because I earnestly believe that in acquiring it, we will have taken a big step in the right direction."

Within six hours of Bachman's speech, students had pledged $76,000 toward the estimated $500,000 needed.

The Memorial Stadium Corp. was organized in spring 1922 to uphold the finances and business dealings of the project.

By December of the same year, students had raised more than $77,000. Faculty had raised about $33,500, and the Manhattan community raised $48,000.

By July 1922, a contract to begin construction was given to Walter Stingley of Manhattan, and building began immediately. Three weeks after the initial construction began, three completed units of West Stadium and the forms for a fourth were used to seat 4,000 spectators at the Homecoming game against the University of Kansas that fall.

In 1924, the east wing was completed, and by 1928, construction for enclosing the walls was completed. This new space under the seats was designed for lockers, storage and dressing Today, bronze plaques hang on the pillars of the east and west wings to honor 48 students who served in WWI.

Enclosure of the west wing locker and office area, which eventually would aid in the many uses for the stadium to come, was finished in 1936.

In 1946, because of a housing shortage on campus after World War II, dorm rooms were constructed in the enclosed areas under the east and west wings. These new rooms housed 266 students for several years.

Even though football had its last season in Memorial Stadium in 1967 with a final seating capacity of 21,700, this would not be the last time the stadium would be utilized.

Today, East Stadium is the home of University Telecommunications, the Purple Masque Theatre and classrooms. You can find an art gallery, art studios and kilns in West

The outside fields of the stadium are used for a number of activities, including the Union Program Council's annual Welcome Back Concert, greek philanthropies, rock-climbing club, soccer, the Homecoming pep rally and bonfire, and rugby and lacrosse games.

"The stadium itself is a manifestation, an outward and visible sign of loyalty in its most superb form," Bachman said that April morning in 1922.

They (soldiers) made a great sacrifice for you and for me, and we are now privileged to show our gratitude by erecting to their memory this monument of loyalty."

K-STATE UNION

Despite contest, crooked U still logo

KATIE WALKER

The K-State Union logo will not be changed, despite last year's contest that selected the logo designed by Robert Grame, senior in graphic design.

Grame's design, which won him $100, was a white U with gray and black lines behind it. The contest was intended to replace the current logo, a crooked U.

Ann Claussen, Union assistant director and program director, said the contest was sponsored by the Union Program Council Promotions Committee as a way of gaining student interest in the Union.

Union Director Jack Sills said. "We thought maybe the existing Union logo was becoming outdated. None of us were overly enthusiastic about the logo, but it has become symbolic of the K-State Union.

'We've decided that we're as happy with our current logo as any that we've seen," Sills said.

A crooked U has been the logo for 20 years.

"There's supposed to be a K, an S and a U in the logo, but I don't think many people have ever seen it in there," Sills said.

Three runners-up in last year's contest were awarded $75, $50 and $25. The prizes were taken from the Promotions Committee budget.

Grame works in the Union promotions and marketing department. He said the reason his design did not get used was because a bulk order of stationery with the logo had already been placed.

"It felt great winning," Grame said. "I understand the politics, so it's no big deal that mine didn't get used."

Habitat chapter to raise roofs for disadvantaged

JILL SCHRAG

Habitat for Humanity, an international organization that provides affordable housing for the poor, is starting a chapter at K-

"If the campus really wants to get involved with this, we could do great things," said Noel Priefert, junior in biology and student leader of Habitat.

The group's first meeting will be Thursday in Union 206. Priefert said the group is looking for volunteers, as well as other leaders.

"This is not a small project," Priefert said. "We want to get the whole campus involved. We want the campus chapter to be as big as it can get.

The program focus is to build or renovate housing and sell it to needy families at cost with an interest-free mortgage, said the Rev. Craig Sommer of Lutheran Campus Ministries. Student members will help with fundraising and construction work on new sites,

"This is not straight charity," Sommer said. "It's an attempt for people to feel empowered, to live in a house they can afford and take

Habitat guidelines for the United States and Canada recommend a simple, decent, well-insulated 1,000-square-foot house with two or three bedrooms and one

According to Habitat literature, the average sale price for such a house in 1990 was $31,980, and the average monthly payment including taxes, insurance and mortgage was $176. Since the organization began in 1976, Habitat has been

Perot just wrong for America

THE ISSUE

Ross Perot excited America by running for President, bowed out, and now may run again.

WE SUGGEST

Perot is like all other politicians. He should not be trusted to run the country after what he did.

Ross Perot may be on the ballot in all 50 states when Election Day rolls around, but so will some person named Other.

The diligence of some die-hard supporters, whether admirable or pathetic, doesn't negate what's wrong with Perot and his campaign.

There was something charming, exciting, even revolutionary about Perot when he first emerged as a dark-horse candidate for president.

He beat Bush and Clinton in the polls on a regular basis. He would have been one of a handful of serious third-party contenders since the turn of the century.

Perot wanted the people to prove they wanted him by getting him on their state ballots. He forced hundreds and thousands of people to pull together in true grassroots fashion and care about politics again.

He was an enticing alternative for voters who were tired of the same old thing.

And he forced the other candidates to talk about issues like they never had before. He made them defend themselves in their anxiety over his increasing, almost unbelievable popularity.

But the charm has worn off. People aren't excited any more - they're annoyed and confused.

fter a 12-year wait...

His supporters have managed to get him on 48 ballots to date, but whether he decides to get back in the race or not, he doesn't deserve the trust of the American people.

By the Collegian Editorial Board

There are a few scenarios that may explain why Perot ran in the first place, and why he bowed out.

He was talked into it, and when things didn't go the way he expected, he got out.

Or he was convinced he was qualified for the job, and when he realized being president wasn't his cup of tea, he got out.

Or maybe, just maybe, this is all just a big tactical plan. The petitions and decision to drop out were just foreplay, and he will get back in the race at the last minute.

All three scenarios should alert the American public: Perot either doesn't want to be president, doesn't think he can do the job, or is a sneaky, conniving political monster.

People backed Perot primarily because he represented change. They were tired of the same old thing - wishy-washy, corrupt, gutless, outof-touch, dishonest politicians.

Whether he wanted to or not, he proved himself to be all that and more.

Campout incident teaches lessons

Editor.

The aftermath of the unfortunate event that put an end to campout last week has created a climate so volatile that it is almost impossible to express oneself without hurting or offending someone else.

Calling it an "alleged rape" is insensitive. But calling it "rape" is libelous. Regardless of how the incident is treated by the courts, Just Guys would like to point out four lessons that all men should learn from it:

1) Almost any man on this campus could have been Mark Mazour.

2)The real tragedy is not the loss of the campout.

3) Manhood has nothing to do with women.

4) Drinking and driving should not be the only thing that friends don't let friends do drunk.

We don't speak for all men. So whether or not you agree with us, we would like to hear from you.

Brazilian leader alienating country

n the last few weeks, the Brazilian political situation has proven to be one of the most important news events in many papers' international section. National, regional and even local papers opened their space, trying to follow the political process that may lead to Brazilian President Fernando Collor do Mello's impeachment.

All this confusion involving the Brazilian president can astonish those who are not familiar with Brazilian politics, but it's not exactly a surprise to the people who live in Brazil.

I arrived from Brazil just a month ago. I'm a Brazilian journalist, and as a reporter, I've been following Brazil's national affairs for five or six years.

During the election of President Collor in late 1989, the first rumors emerged about irregularities the collection and management of campaign funds.

T h e media, especially the newspapers, alerted their readers about supposed faults in Collor's campaign. They alleged that his treasurer, Paulo Cesar Farias, received and managed funds donated by private companies, which is forbidden by Brazilian electoral law.

GUEST

president's the After inauguration in March 1990, the press continued to mention isolated episodes that showed the existence of a scheme, later called the "influence-peddling net," which was spread all over federal government agencies.

The scheme worked as a parallel government, informally controlling all state departments. It decided, for instance, how much money would be allocated to a public work and which company would be in charge of the work. Paulo Cesar Farias was later proven to be in command of this scheme.

The actual political crisis was escalated last May by Pedro Collor de Mello, one of the President's brothers. Due to a dispute for control of the Collor family business, the president's brother gave a revealing interview to VEJA, an important Brazilian weekly magazine, disclosing details of how the influence-peddling worked. Pedro Collor said his brother knew all about the scheme.

Even for people like me, who used to read and even write political news daily, the interview was a shock. Many people knew what was happening, but I think only a few of them expected the situation to be so

With information provided by the press, the Brazilian Congress started a special investigation. After all leads pointed to the president's campaign treasurer, the question of whether or not the president himself knew about the scheme arose. Fraudulent bank accounts, graphological exams of the signatures to these accounts proving they were falsified, and checks supplied to the president's private secretary account raised further questions.

Just after his inauguration, the president refurbished his private house in Brasilia. The remodeling cost of $1.2 million was paid by Farias.

A political crisis arose three weeks ago when the congress reported all the irregularities involving the scheme. This was further aggravated when more than 200,000 people in Sao Paulo and 100,000 in Rio de Janeiro gathered in the streets to demand the president's resignation.

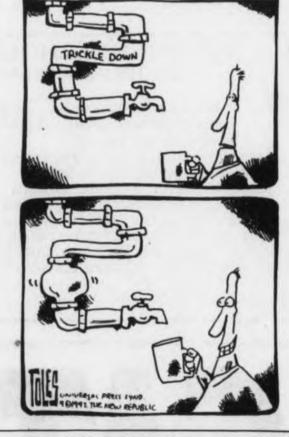

I've been talking by phone with my friends and family in Brazil, and they say that these demonstrations, which many of them attended, were amazing, especially because they were spontaneous. People just decided to wear black clothes, take to the streets and protest the corruption.

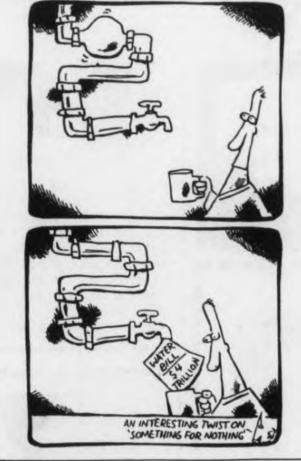

The country now faces an impasse. Collor has already practically lost all his political support in Congress. The latest news said that he is trying to negotiate his resignation, effective

I've started working toward my master's degree in journalism. It's distressing for me, both as a journalist and Brazilian citizen, to not be able to closely follow what's happening in my country. Either I must read the paper, hoping for some news, or I'must take the more expensive route and call my friends in Brazil.

My country has not had a democracy for 20 years. I voted for president for the first time in 1989 when I was 25 years old. As a student and a professional, I've been struggling for democracy. Now, I sincerely hope that our young Brazilian democracy is mature enough to weather this political crisis and find the best solution to the country's future.

Life's object is to live here and now

Our fear of living has given us laws. Our fear of death has given us religion.

Are we afraid of death, or are we afraid of life?

People spend an enormous amount of time trying to figure out the meaning of life and the perils of the afterlife. But all the time spent examining life and death has impeded our ability to enjoy today.

It is impossible to prove we exist. For all we know, our "lives" are fragments of a dream, distorted visions of reality or particles of a parallel universe.

And death might very well be the same concept. Who knows what fate awaits a person and his or her energy when the body as we know it gives out. Our fear of living has given us laws. Our fear of death has given us religion.

Laws and religion assume that if left to our own devices, humans would only do bad. An evil lurks at the core of our desires, and if left to our own design, humanity will cease to exist.

We are here to experience all we can. We travel to foreign lands to meet different people, eat different foods and experience different cultures. These are all acceptable experiences in

For example, if I want to smoke a marijuana joint in my house, I should have that right. I am not going to hurt anyone. I am only going to experience a reality that our senses can't always tap into.

Or, if I want to walk in the park or swim in the lake without my clothes, I should not have to worry about being arrested. These are my choices and my decisions, not my government's.

Admittedly, what gives one person pleasure is not going to give all people pleasure. Regardless, the fears of a few should not limit the desires of others. There exists another world that many people will not experience

The storyline of the British movie "Let Him Have It" follows a teen-ager charged with murder because of his words.

The film is based on the true story of two young men in post-World War II Britain, who are tried for the fatal shooting of a police officer. The film powerfully confronts issues still prevalent in society today.

Derek Bentley (Christopher Eccleston) is a 19-year-old epileptic, who is mentally equivalent to an 11-year-old. And he is a boy who is afraid to stand up to friends.

Backfield boasts of new and old

Linebacker Brooks Barta takes signals from the sidelines during last year's game against Indiana State.

Linebacking duo has tons of experience

STEVE ROCK

Between the two of them, seniors Brooks Barta and Chris Patterson comprise one of the most experienced linebacking duos in the Big Eight.

Barta and Patterson have been starters since their freshman year.

Barta enters his senior season as the ninth-leading tackler in Wildcat history. His career total of 294 stops is just 88 shy of the Cat record. He compiled 108 last year and was the leading tackler for the third straight year.

Patterson hasn't gone a single season with less than 71 stops and has been one of the Big Eight's leading tacklers during the last three seasons. He enters his final season as a true contender for all-Big Eight honors.

"We feel great about our season this year," Patterson said. "This defense is intense."

This intense defense is going to have to perform without last year's second-leading tackler, Joe Boone, who made 89 stops a year ago.

But it may not be Boone's tackling skills the squad will miss the most.

"Joe was a great emotional leader," Barta said. "But I think most emotion stems from the defense. I think we have enough experience that it'll just take care of itself." The strength of the linebacking crew goes beyond

Barta and Patterson. Senior Brent Venables has proven himself to be a capable Big Eight performer. An example is his ninetackle performance in the Wildcat victory over KU last year. He will step into the starting spot in the middle of the three-linebacker set. Junior Laird Veatch, who has both strength and speed, could challenge Venables for that starting nod.

Throw in senior Kyle Garst, who is one of the team's strongest linebackers, and sophomore Kirby Hocutt, a youngster who has progressed steadily behind Barta, and the strength of the linebacking crew is as deep as it's

Mendez, Randolph lead young secondary

"I think they'll do quite well, since we've developed some depth at that position."

BILL SNYDER

SCOTT ABEL

Times are changing in Big Eight football, and K-State's young secondary is adapting in 1992.

Traditional running teams will be throwing the ball more in conference play, putting more of a burden on the Wildcat backfield. The first test comes Saturday with the pass-oriented Montana.

"I'm anxious to see how they all respond," Coach Bill Snyder said. "I think they'll do quite well, since we've developed some depth at that position.

"We'll see how it goes, but this game is a great way to baptize

The major task for the secondary this season is to replace two all-conference cornerbacks. William Price played all 11 games at cornerback last year and had four interceptions. Rogerick Green took his talents to the NFL after making three interceptions in nine games last year. Both players made honorable mention for the 1991 all-Big Eight team. Taking one of the cornerback spots will be junior Kitt Rawlings, who was K-State's second-leading running back behind Eric Gallon last season.

Rawlings switched to defense during the spring workouts "He's made the transition quite well," secondary coach Bob Stoops said. "The biggest thing has been learning all the adjustments and intricacies of playing the position. His skills fit the position.'

Thomas Randolph, a two-time all-American in track, will start at the other cornerback spot, which he got a taste of last year.

"I started one time last year, which was real rough," he said. 'But I've got that out of the way now, and I'm just ready to play."

Stoops said, "I think Thomas possesses better ball skills than . we've had at that position before, and (better) timing and judgment of the ball, which is very important." One virtually worry-free position for the Wildcats is free safety. Junior Jamie Mendez is one of 20 national finalists for the Jim Thorpe Award for the best defensive back in the nation. Mendez said he thinks playing Montana will give the Cats what they need most - experience.

"We lost three of our four cornerbacks," Mendez said. "So we're starting guys who have the talent, but not the experience.

"If there's one area we need to work on, it's just getting that game experience." Senior C.J. Masters will return to fill the Wildcats' strong safety role where he broke up seven passes and racked up 51 tackles last year. He and Mendez will give K-State one of the most formidable safety tandems in the Big Eight.

CHIEFS RELEASE PAIGE, SIGN MICKELL

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (AP) - The Kansas City Chiefs said Tuesday they have signed defensive end Darren Mickell, taken in the supplemental draft last month, and released holdout wide receiver Stephone Paige.

Paige is a 10-year veteran and the Chiefs' fourth all-time leading receiver. He never joined the team in training

"This is a football decision," coach Marty Schottenheimer said. "We are relinquishing the rights to Paige, and he can sign with any other NFL team."

Team ready to defend league crown

STEVE ROCK Collegian

Members of the men's soccer team entered the fall season with memories of the spring season still dancing in their heads.

For the first time since 1982, the Wildcats took the Big Eight title by beating Nebraska 1-0 in the championship game in April of last year.

And anything short of a repeat performance would be a step backward, said Frank Weeks, team president.

"I'm counting on defending the title, just because we have so many returning starters," he said. "I don't see any reason why we couldn't do it.

"I think it would be a letdown if we don't win the Big Eight again."

The team took the first step toward defending its title with a victory in its first game Tuesday night. The Wildcats beat Manhattan Christian College 5-0.

"The game was better than I expected," Weeks said. "For our first game, it was like we've already played."

Weeks, the halfback who scored the lone goal in last year's championship game, said last year's victory was a surprise because the players hadn't played a game together before.

"We just pulled it all together and won that tournament," he said.

But will the pressure of being defending champions adversely affect the team?

Viktur Atughonu, the Wildcat coach who won last year's Big Eight Coach of the Year honors, said it won't.

"I think it will make them play better," he said. "The win gave us lots of confidence.

"With the talent we have, I will be disappointed if we don't repeat.'

Even though the squad won't try to defend its title until the spring season, team confidence will keep the players in the right mindset, faculty adviser Charles Hedgcoth said.

The team itself has quite a bit of confidence coming out of something like that,' Hedgcoth said.

Hunters wait in cold snap for teals

Teal season began Saturday and will continue through Sunday.

And it's nice outside. Has been all week. Maybe for the rest of the week.

"Drat," say Kansas hunters. The cold snap that drove the doves prematurely south is gone, replaced by this horrid weather, ideal for garden weedings and fraternal pole sitting. It's awful for duck hunting.

An informal survey of fishermen at Shawnee County State Lake Sunday afternoon revealed that 75 percent of survey respondents (three guys) had gone after the small birds and gave up after two days of failure.

"Heartbreaking," said Joe Mendoza of Topeka.

This was the first teal season since 1987, and many hunters, including

Mendoza, carried high hopes into this

Bottoms and isolated farm ponds would be decent habitat for the small ducks. Hard to call teal. Though closely related to mallards, pintails and wigeons, the largest teal are only 15 inches long, or about the size of a small crow. They fly in hardly tastes like duck. Yet, it is. The smaller green-winged teal (Anas crecca), will probably be found only in the southeastern corner of the state, in the secessionist counties. Hunters in search of these teal are advised to do two things.

County senior center celebrates 10th anniversary

Talent and musical shows, picnic, bingo included in week of activities

DEBORAH WHITSON

Older adults in the Manhattan area have a reason to celebrate with the Riley County Seniors Service Center's 10th anniversary this week.

"This is going to be a really busy week," said Donna McCallum, program director for the center. 'There are lots of fun events, and we're really excited."

The week of events began with a kick-off breakfast Monday morning. There will also be a picnic Thursday at the City Park pavilion and a bingo game Friday night.

The center's schedule includes a bingo game every week, but this game will have special prizes, McCallum said.

of guest artists every day. Programs will include a sing-along, vocalists and instrumental artists.

McCallum said the center has its own 38-member band called the Uptown Band, which will perform Thursday night after the picnic. She said the band plays anything you want to hear.

All events this week are free, except a fund-raising fashion show that was Tuesday night.

McCallum said it is not necessary to be a member to attend any of the center's events this week or anytime. She said dues are $10 a year and include discounts, special mailings and a newsletter.

Hard-core patrons of the center can join a pool game or a game of cards almost any time they walk in the door, McCallum said. Some

Free vocational services offered to single parents, displaced homemakers

New Directions gives unemployed single parents and displaced homemakers another chance.

The community outreach program is free and provides vocational education programs to people in the Manhattan area.

College officials challenge report provided a simplistic explanation Congressional study had cited

skyrocketing costs ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON - College officials on Tuesday disputed a congressional study that blamed skyrocketing college tuition and fees on administrative bloat and costly academic research.

Richard Rosser, president of the National Association of Independent Colleges and Universities, said the House Select Committee on Children, Youth and Families had for the skyrocketing costs of public collegiate education Monday.

Rosser, one of six higher education officials who met with reporters to discuss wide-ranging education issues, said officials would welcome a meeting with Rep. Patricia Schroeder, D-Colo., who is the committee chairwoman.

Schroeder's committee released results of an investigation that found that tuition and fees rose by 141 percent at public four-year colleges and universities from 1980 to 1990, and by 12 percent for the 1991-92 school year. Inflation was 63.6 percent in the 1980s, 3.2 percent last year.

Despite the increases, Schroeder said, the amount of teaching time went down, and class sizes went up, with colleges increasing the use of graduate assistants to teach undergraduate courses.

Schroeder attributed the changes to an increased emphasis on

Also, the investigation found that the number of academicsupport professionals - such as financial aid counselors and coaches - grew by more than 60 percent between 1975 and 1985. Full-time faculty rose by 6 percent, while executive and administrative employees increased by 18 percent. "I think what we have is really a distortion," said Rosser said.

James Appleberry, president of the American Association of State Colleges and Universities, said in two years, higher education lost $3.2 billion in purchasing power, mainly because of budget cuts and Appleberry said that, last year, 22 state institutions began the year with less money appropriated than the year before, while 35 schools cut their budgets in mid-year. This year, 15 institutions had their budgets cut from the previous year,

K-State student needs an escort

I live alone off campus and do not have a vehicle. Short of getting a bike that would be useless in winter, or inconveniencing a classmate every week after a night class, is there a way where the escort system for students living on campus can be extended to other students like me? M.S.L., K-State student

There is no official escort service offered at K-State. There are, however, two escort services that I am aware of offered through two residence halls. One service called Respect Escort Service (532-5150) is based at Goodnow Hall. The other is Haymaker Escort Service (532-3710) and is based in Haymaker Hall.

the developmental stage, they do offer a free service primarily to K-State women living on campus in the residence halls. Dan Merson of Goodnow and Chris Ediger of Haymaker both assured me their respective escort services did not want to turn anyone away and would try to accommodate anyone needing an escort on an individual basis.

Give them a call. I think they will try to help you.

DEAR CASSANDRA.

I am concerned about parking regulations at the Chester E. Peters Recreational Complex. A person must have a parking permit to park at the complex between 8 a.m. and 4 p.m. Yet, after 4 p.m., one may park anywhere without a permit.

I, like many students, live close to campus, because I enjoy not having to drive to class. I also enjoy not having to pay for a parking permit. Why, then, should I be required to buy a permit so that I may use the Rec Complex, a privilege I already pay for? My location doesn't allow me to walk to the Rec Complex to use those facilities at certain times. What is the difference between parking at the complex before 4 p.m. and after 4 p.m.? I would appreciate knowing the reasoning behind these regulations.

K.M., K-State junior

Did you ever get the feeling after asking someone something several times that they really don't have any idea what you are talking about?

I called Parking Services and explained your situation and was informed that the Rec Complex has the same rules for parking as any other campus parking lot, but is actually open to permit-free parking an hour earlier than the rest of campus (7 a.m.-4 p.m., rather than 7 a.m.-5 p.m.).

I never really got a reason for why the rules are the way they are. You can call Dwain Archer (532-5710) at Parking Services to request a hearing with the Parking Council to voice your complaint and ask them to change the regulations.

Go for it. At this point, what have you got to lose?

responsible for the construction or renovation of 10,846 houses. Sommer said low-income

Sommer said low-income individuals who are selected to buy homes must donate 100 hours of their own time to construction or renovation. Volunteers also benefit from working on the construction, he said.

"The workers get to help and see where their money is going," Sommer said. "They don't just give money to this organization and never see where it goes."

Tens of thousands of volunteers are active in Habitat projects in the United States and Canada, but there are also more than 100 projects in Australia and 30 developing countries, including Costa Rica, Mexico and Zaire.

In less than three years, more than 150 campus chapters of Habitat for Humanity have been chartered.

"Since students don't have a lot of money, they can give time, instead, to projects like this," Sommer said. "My goal is to start out small and get some experience, but, ultimately, to have our own local affiliate to provide affordable housing for low-income people."

The first tentatively scheduled project for K-State's chapter will be at an affiliate site in Salina. The group will weatherproof an old house for winter Oct. 17.

Thompson filed an appeal on behalf of Deyoe and the University last April. However, Thompson said the University withdrew it late last spring.

Deyoe said that while he denies all charges, he originally decided to resign because "I've been in the department a long time, and the time comes when you basically want to find out what you want to do in the next few years. Everything affects a personal decision."

Even though Deyoe resigned as department head effective July 1, Woods reinstated him on that same date as interim department head. Woods also retained him as director of the Food and Feed Grains Institute and the International Grains Program.

Deyoe said he agreed with Woods' decision to keep him in the interim position, however, for the department's benefit.

"It's a lot simpler for everyone to have me stay, since I know the office processes," Deyoe said.

Members of the faculty and staff would not comment on the

In addition to his current position, Deyoe is also the paid director of two agricultural programs that represent the "I work with people from other countries," he said. "I'm representing the University and have different interaction with many groups of people. I also work with different individuals in the state."

Deyoe would not comment on whether the lawsuit had damaged the University's reputation, but he said the grain program has increased slightly over the years.

Woods also would not comment on any damage to the University or College of Agriculture.

Deyoe said he will continue to serve as interim head until someone else can succeed him. Woods said he has received many applications so far.

relocation costs.

The final incentive was to implement an "in lieu" payment plan toward taxation. In lieu of paying the full rate, or mill levy, of the land's taxes, the city offered the company a proposal that lowered the taxes considerably.

The plan would allow Abbott to pay only 20 percent of the full tax rate the first and second years, 40 percent the third and fourth years, 60 percent the fifth and sixth years and 80 percent the seventh and eighth years. From the ninth year on, the company would be expected to pay the full tax rate.

Carl Reed, Abbott president and chief executive officer, said the business climate has turned ugly in Phoenix because of the recession, and he has decided it is time to relocate his company.

Manhattan is at the top of Reed's list of possible relocation sites, he said.

He also said the move to Manhattan will create about 15 jobs, initially. Eventually, he said, 45-50 jobs will be created.

In the memo, Nicholls said the process began with the receipt of departmental reviews, and later, role and aspiration statements from all departments and programs within the College of Arts and Sciences.

Those reviews and statements then went to the Arts and Sciences College Corp Group, which is made up of faculty, students and classified staff within the college.

According to the memo, the Peter Nicholls made the College Corp Group reviewed guidelines for the emphasis and de-emphasis of programs and then asked Nicholls for specific recommendations. Nicholls wrote that the corp

"I felt that there was a strong need to increase college support," he said. "My recommendation has been to add faculty in the area. It's a high priority for the institution, especially considering the multicultural overlay."

"The only place to register to vote on campus is in the student government not wanting to be involved, but since offices," he said. "If I'm elected, I will work to facilitate voter registration among the students.

MALCOLM X WIDOW SUES OVER CLOTHING

LAS VEGAS (AP) - The widow of the late Malcolm X has sued in federal court over the alleged unauthorized use of his name and image on hats, Tshirts and other clothing.

The lawsuit was filed Tuesday, a week after the items were displayed at a large clothing apparel convention here.

The lawsuit names more than a dozen defendants that it wants stopped from making and selling unauthorized apparel. It also asks that any profits made so far go to Dr. Betty Shabazz, the widow of Malcolm X.

Shabazz and Curtis Management Group, which has an agreement with her to license Malcolm X's rights, filed the lawsuit.

TOUR HELICOPTER CRASHES IN HAWAII

WAILUKU, Hawaii (AP) - A tour helicopter crashed on an inactive volcano on the island of Maui on Wednesday, killing seven people, authorities said.

The helicopter crashed at midday 3,000 feet up the south side of 10,000foot Haleakala mountain, Fire Battalion Chief Conrad Ventura said.

Peter Beckner of the Federal Aviation Administration in Honolulu said those aboard included the pilot and six passengers. There was reportedly a fire after the crash, police Lt. Creighton Kamana said.

The helicopter was a French-made AS-350B Aerospatiale, one of three operated by Hawaii Helicopters out of the Kahului Airport.

Women's center educates on rape

CRAIG HACKER/Collegia

Could you steal your friend's wallet or commit a serious act of violence against an acquaintance?

Judy Davis, director of the Women's Resource Center, said these situations parallel the thoughts and actions of a person who commits acquaintance rape.

Students' awareness of and curiosity about acquaintance rape, she said, has been heightened by the alleged rape that lead to the early cancellation of the basketball campout.

'Acquaintance rape is not a new situation, but one that has become more common and poses a great risk for men and women," she said.

Research indicates about 95 percent of all rapes on campuses are acquaintance rapes, she said.

Students need to get to the understanding of the statistics and the trauma the victim undergoes and how profoundly demeaning and degrading it is," Davis said.

"Each of us, every day and in every way, has to become more aware that not only is rape between friends common, but that much of it stems from our culture," she said. "In one way or another, we all take part in it."

The Women's Resource Center is looking for men and women to volunteer in the center's rapeprevention program.

The program informs students about rape, acquaintance rape and the prevention of situations in which rape could occur.

It has been presented before to many living groups and organizations in past semesters, and Davis said she is sold on its effectiveness.

'We've presented the rapeprevention program at freshman orientation, to various living groups and at arts and sciences seminars. It's been very effective. I think it's very important to educate every incoming freshman - to get them to know the facts," she said.

Student Governing Association is taking a stand on implementing a mandatory information program for new students. It's in the planning stages, for now.

'Right now, we're in the process of gathering volunteers together to train them about the current rapeprevention program, and we're getting in contact with organizations and presenting it," said Marc Scarbrough, senior in electrical engineering and SGA student affairs chairman.

"Our goal will be to make students aware of the facts and of the prevention program. It will be a positive step in making the campus aware," he said.

Because there are more than 300 organizations on campus, Scarbrough said it won't be easy to get to each one. The committee's goal will be to target the ones with the largest populations.

Editor's Note: This is the first in a series of articles about the American beef and cattle industry.

Beef - it's what's for dinner. Or is it? Due to a trend toward health consciousness, people are re-evaluating their choice to eat meat, particularly beef. Such a concern has raised a lot of questions and many uneducated answers, said Dianna Elias, coordinator of Consumer Affairs and Nutrition for the Kansas Beef Council.

Elias said because of certain beliefs, the KBC has been trying to educate the public

One way is through the pamphlet "Myths and Facts About Beef Production.'

The pamphlet includes 12 common myths and facts about beef. Of those 12, three are related to the contents of beef and its effect

One point is that people often perceive beef as a cause of heart and circulatory problems. The pamphlet says trimming fat can solve this problem, and the American Heart Association recommends 5 to 7 ounces of beef each day.

Another myth mentioned in the pamphlet is that antibiotics leave hazardous residues in beef, thus harming those who eat the beef. The fact, it says, is that such residues are not found in beef.

People are also concerned with the amount of pesticides cattle eat, but the pamphlet pointed out that the U.S. Department of Agriculture has reported no violative pesticide traces in beef.

"I'm not one to sling mud, but I like for people to know all of the facts," Elias said. "I think the industry should rely on the facts and back the product with these facts."

BEEF MYTHS AND FACTS

Myths and facts about the production and consumption of beef in the U.S.

MYTH: The risk of death from heart disease and other diseases can be greatly reduced if a person avoids eating a meat-centered diet.

FACT: Lean beef is regarded by health organizations as a valuable part of American diets. The American Dietetic Association, American Heart Association and others generally recommend 5 to 7oz. of lean-trimmed meat daily.

MYTH: Use of antibiotics and hormone growth implants in livestock production is causing hazardous residues in beef and is contributing to the development of health problems in humans.

No residues from feeding antibiotics are found in beef, and there is no valid scientific evidence that antibiotic use in cattle causes illnesses resulting from the development of antibiotic-resistant bacteria.

Veterinary student wins scholarship from Kennel Club

Animals more than pets to people, Oppenheimer says

SHEDERA BAUSCH

Victor Oppenheimer, a fourthyear student in veterinary medicine, was awarded a $1,000 scholarship from the American Kennel Club.

Oppenheimer, a native of Puerto Rico, has a special interest in purebred dogs, which was one of the scholarship requirements. Besides his special studies, Oppenheimer said he wants to start a program to teach the public how to take care of animals.

"My main interest is to teach society that animals are more than pets," Oppenheimer said. "So many are thrown away. They give back so much, and people make them go through so much pain.'

Suzanne Lustig, public relations manager of the American Kennel Club, based in New York, said the kennel club serves several purposes for dog owners.

The club is one of the largest registries of purebred dogs in the world. They keep track of dog show records, and they have also started a responsible-dog-owner program.

Kedzie Hall 116.

"The scholarship was started in 1991 to help encourage students to pursue canine studies," Lustig said.

Oppenheimer, who is currently on clinical rotation this semester, found out about the scholarship through a magazine distributed by the American Kennel Club.

"There were 144 applicants, and we awarded scholarships to 37 of them," Lustig said.

Dr. Ronald McLaughlin, an orthopedic surgeon at the Veterinary Medicine Complex, said wasn't surprised that Oppenheimer received the schol-

"Victor is a good student, very attentive and interested in his work," McLaughlin said. "He is inquisitive and concise, and he thinks of things logically. He is one that would take the initiative and go after it."

Oppenheimer said the scholarship came in handy.

"I want to use it to buy some more books relating to my studies," he said. "The books cost between $80 and $100 each."

Oppenheimer said he will take his national boards in December and will then looking for a job in the United States.

Candy, clowns and other carnival favorites were featured at the Health Fair Wednesday afternoon in front of Lafene Health Center.

Cindy Burke, director of health education, said the purpose behind the fair was to help educate students about Lafene and the services it provides.

The fair featured a variety of booths with information on a variety of services ranging from the women's clinic to the Teaching Others Alcohol Safety Tactics program. Other popular features included free blood pressure checks and a contest based on shoulder

Burke said Lafene had sponsored health fairs at the K-State Union in the past, but said she felt the location on the front lawn of Lafene was more

Friends of victim petition Arkansas to prosecute Dunn

COLBY - A petition drive started by a friend of a family whose son was slain in a 1985 crime spree urges Arkansas officials to prosecute a woman for

"If she were innocent, I wouldn't be doing this," said Betty Schroeder of Levant, whose son, Rick, was among the Kansas victims in the multistate spree. "We thought we would do it for a couple of weeks and see what happens."

A jury in Topeka earlier this month acquitted Lisa Dunn, 26, of murder and kidnapping in the crime spree. She had served more than seven years for earlier convictions, but was acquitted after using a battered-woman syndrome defense in the new trial ordered by a federal judge.

She remains in custody, however, pending extradition to Arkansas, where another slaying took place during the crime spree.

Schroeder said a friend in Colby started the petition drive. The family also was encouraged to collect the signatures by the Kansas attorney general's office, she said.

She estimated more than 500 people had signed petitions, and several documents had already been sent to Arkansas.

A prosecutor in Fort Smith, Ark., said Tuesday he had received petitions with 245 signatures requesting that Dunn be tried.

His office also has received about 10 letters from people in Traverse City, Mich., requesting he drop the charges, said Ron Fields of Fort Smith, prosecutor for Arkansas' 12th Judicial Circuit.

UPC sponsors drive to register voters

Event to inform students about election procedures

KIRSTEN NELSON

Now is the time to register to vote, and UPC's first voterregistration drive will make it easy and convenient.

The drive will be from noon to 5 p.m. Saturday at Triangle Park during Cat Jam '92. It is sponsored by the Union Program Council Issues and Ideas Committee and the Legislative Affairs Committee of the Student Governing Association. "I think that students need to have more of a voice in presidential elections," UPC adviser Charla Bailey said. "A lot don't know how to do the absentee ballot or get registered. I think it's a good way to get the information out.'

Students won't actually be able to register at the drive, but they'll fill out forms to have registration papers sent to them, Bailey said.

'We're going to have forms there that people can fill out that allow them to have a registration form sent to their house," said Brent Coverdale, Issues and Ideas Committee chairman.

If students want to register in Riley County, they will need to send the completed forms to the Riley County clerk, Bailey said. The county clerk's office will then send registration papers to them.

Students who want to register in their home counties need to send the completed forms to their own county clerk's office. The county clerk will then send them a registration form for an absentee ballot, said Ilene Colbert, Riley

Few victories in war on drugs

THE ISSUE

Despite spending $32 billion in three years, the president's war on drugs has been a failure.

WE SUGGEST

Reorganiztion at all levels is needed, especially replacing the drug policy director, Bob Martinez.

The Bush administration's war on drugs has been driven back by the enemy.

And a recent Senate study has further added ammunition that's left many of the president's soldiers scratching their heads.

Conceived three years ago in a gallant flurry of media coverage and promises of a new, drugfree America, the $32 billion spent has done little to slow drug-related murders, decrease addiction or treat those already addicted.

The facts almost stand alone.

In the past three years, nearly 72,000 people have been murdered because of their ties to drugs.

Three million more people have become addicted to cocaine and heroin.

One million of these addicts have been unable to get treatment for their dependence.

Nearly 900,000 babies were born with a drug addiction, with only one in 10 pregnant addicts receiving proper prenatal care.

And perhaps worst of all, drug programs only reach half of all school children. Our future hopes are in danger of becoming our future junkies.

The reasons for the massive failure of the anti-drug campaign are numerous, but they seem to reside most with those people deigned to run it. Bob Martinez, Bush's drug-policy director, has staffed his group with people chosen for political reasons rather than their abilities to handle the task.

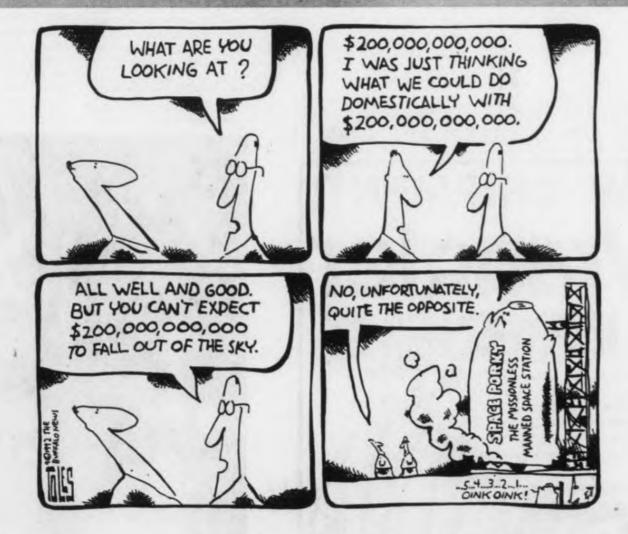

Who's to blame? Not Congress. It gave Bush every penny he wanted plus an extra $340 million.

If the program is getting the proper financing, it's up to Bush to put capable people at the helm, not patsies whose failures are all too apparent.

This is not a war on another country, but a war against an insidious disease that threatens to undermine society if not stopped soon. It's time for a major house cleaning to put the program back on track and get the results the taxpayers expect, the results they demand.

If Bush tackles this problem with the gusto he tackled Desert Storm, the drug problem would soon be spiraling down instead of up. Let's hope

Cryptology not Uncle Sam's business

HAWKS

recently went to see the new movie, "Sneakers," which I heartily recommend to anyone looking for a flick with the subtlety of "The Sting" and the music of Branford Marsalis.

The movie's storyline, which involves computer data encryption, a secret decoder and the National Security Agency raised an old concern in my mind: What degree of control should the government have over the codes we

Today, the ability to encode data with sophisticated encryption technology is available to nearly anyone, for personal or business use. This technology, however, is strictly controlled by the government specifically, by the National Security Agency. Since the 1940s, computer companies who produce encryption devices have tacitly cooperated with the government, whose control over codes was easy to defend during the Cold

Now, those computer companies are beginning to feel the business demand for encryption technology, which can be vital in protecting transactions over the increasingly computerized money network. American companies are at a disadvantage to foreign companies, who have little constraint over their use of encryption.

All this comes from the desire of the government to be able to read your mail. Government officials see the ability to break codes as vital to maintaining law and order.

As one FBI official said, "Somebody who has a rudimentary knowledge of cryptography can generate something on a personal computer that would give us fits as far as reading it."

Advances in cryptography are indeed giving them fits. As far back as 1976, Stanford University scientists conceived of a practical, unbreakable way to encode information that would use a public key to encode information and a secret key to decipher it. The NSA rejected any application of this technique, saying that it would leave them unable to gain access to sensitive information. This, of course, was the point of the project.

The next year, the NSA implemented weakened data encryption standard that many cryptographers claimed was breakable, which they later went on to prove. Presently, most mathematicians and computer scientists working on cryptography voluntarily submit papers to the NSA for review before they are published, partly to protect the weak security standard now in place. The NSA has never allowed commercial development of "unbreakable" codes.

Now, legislation is before Congress that would further weaken business' ability to protect data. It would require software makers to provide a "back door" to make it easier for Federal agents to access protected files. The banking industry opposes the bill, declaiming the expense of changing technology.

The government's control over data encryption is senseless. The economic needs of the country in the next decade may depend on widespread availability of encryption techniques to protect data. Failing that, we could face the kind of crisis previewed in "Sneakers."

Change may be possible. The computer industry supports a bill that would transfer control of encryption exports from the NSA to the Commerce Department, aiding overseas sales and making encryption more available to companies. The president, however, has threatened to veto this bill if negotiations do not result in a weakened encryption standard unacceptable to many business customers.

I wonder if Mr. Bush knows that they can read his mail, too.

VOTER REGISTRATION Track record calls for change in clerks

Editor.

In response to the Sept. 15 Collegian article regarding voter registration, I would like to say that the only solution to the problem is to vote the current Riley County clerk out of office.

County clerk is a public office, created to serve the public. The student body is an important part of the community.

Yet, the current clerk has repeatedly and blatantly ignored the needs and desires of students and other young people in our community, especially through her voter registration policies. In addition, it is obvious through the actions of the Douglas County clerk that voter registration policies can be open, convenient and encompassing. Despite her claims, the current clerk seems to make every effort to prevent easy and accessible voter registration in Riley County. She appears to be opposed to student voting, and she demonstrates this clearly through her policy.

Nothing is going to change in Riley County unless students take the initiative. Without a new clerk, there will be no new policies. K-State students need to show the clerk that it is not acceptable for her to ignore their interests, and the way to do it is to elect someone who will take the time and make the effort to guarantee the student's rights. That candidate is Craig Raborn.

I have had the opportunity to discuss at length Raborn's plans and ideas for improving voter registration policies in Riley County. A few of the ideas allowing voter include registration at the front desks of the residence halls and inside the K-State Union Stateroom.

He believes that in addition to advertisements featured in the line schedule, there should be a voter registration card assuring every student the opportunity to register. One particularly visionary idea would allow disc jockeys to be deputized and register voters at remote broadcast sights.

They need to make the extra effort this election year to register and elect a county clerk who will work for them, instead of against them. Otherwise, we will be burdened for another term with a county clerk who believes students are neither responsible enough to be deputized nor responsible enough to vote.

Even the most successful space ventures no longer command rapt attention in America. The bloom is off NASA's interplanetary rose.

And a Congress and administration committed to inner cities, health care and eduction steer away from the distant stars. All that is understandable.

But space remains the last frontier; a measure of technological greatness and a journey that certainly has its earthly rewards.

The question is, is there a cheaper way to fly? They answer is yes - in money-saving cooperation among nations still aiming for that ultimate high ground of space.

The painful realization is that no nation, including the United States, can afford to conquer space alone. Already, NASA is implementing the Bush-Yeltsin space accords announced in June. We are looking at a cooperated effort that is unprecedented.

Think about it. Russian cosmonauts flying on NASA's shuttle while American astronauts are stationed on Russia's great MIR

Most people would consider $7.6 billion to be a pretty sizable bankroll. But when President Bush announced he would ask Congress to approve that much money in emergency aid to clean up after Hurricane Andrew, Florida Gov. Lawton Chiles was quick with criticism.

It wasn't even half of what Florida should get, he said.

Granted, the damage is severe. Estimates in Florida run as high as $20 billion.

But the $7.6 billion isn't chicken feed, especially from a federal budget already in the red to the tune of about $400 billion. Understandably, it's all about politics. Bush wants to be seen as

KC school official to speak at symposium

Event organized, implemented by education students

DAVID FRESE

The sixth College of Education Symposium will begin at 8 a.m. Friday in the K-State Union.

Several speakers will talk about cultural diversity in education, magnet schools, teacher liability and technology for hearingimpaired students.

Though the original keynote Walter Marks, speaker, superintendent of the Kansas City, Mo., Public Schools, has canceled, he will send a replacement, said Steve Ziegelmeier, program and presentations chairman.

Ziegelmeier said Marks' replacement will talk about some of the goals and accomplishments of the Kansas City school system.

Kansas City has one of the nation's top magnet school systems, Ziegelmeier said.

The symposium is completely student organized, planned and implemented, said Willard Nelson, associate director for student and professional services and symposium adviser.

"Even though it's put on in the college, the students had a free hand in planning this," Nelson said.

There will be meetings every hour, and students can attend up to six different sessions if they have preregistered.

"Students will have the opportunity to learn from different people from scattered places." Nelson said. "Plus, there is a lot of informal interaction between the students and the speakers.'

Nelson said the Department of Continuing Education, which oversees the symposium, has been very impressed with what the students have done with the symposium in the past.

An ordinance approved in August established the commission and task force and brought the city in line with existing federal and state civil-rights laws.

The commission has drafted a Bias Crimes ordinance that would provide stiffer penalties if a crime is committed against someone because of sexual orientation, Bates

City officials have warned the group's efforts to repeal parts of the civil-rights ordinance could result in the loss of $50,000 a year in federal

Marilyn Quayle received warmly at Kansas fair

ASSOCIATED PRESS

HUTCHINSON - Kansas farmers should support the Republican presidential ticket because the Democrats are proposing environmental laws that will hurt agriculture, Marilyn Quayle said during a tour of the Kansas State Fair Wednesday at Hutchinson.

During a brief news conference, Quayle said President Bush understands farmers' problems and has worked to get fair trade agreements to give agricultural products better access to foreign markets.

She blasted the Bill Clinton-Al Gore ticket's attitude toward farmers, saying Gore has advocated environmental policies that would harm agriculture.

"He has called for farmers to quit using any kind of herbicide, insecticide or fertilizers, which would be very difficult for all of our farmers. And really there hasn't been any proven studies that shows that that's necessary," Quayle said she didn't come to Kansas because of polls showing the presidential race is close here.

"It's a sign of the fact I like state fairs, and I was coming to Kansas and saw it on the calendar and asked if I could come," she said. "I think the election could be tight nationwide.'

Quayle described herself as "an old 4-H'er from Indiana," making a reference to the 4-H club members who compete at fairs.

"She was very warmly received everywhere she went," said Lois Schlickau of Haven, state fair

In the Industrial Building on the fairgrounds, Quayle visited with workers at the Republican Party booth and stopped every few feet to shake hands with fairgoers and exhibitors.

Lutheran group offers workshops

Contemporary music, modern language stressed

KATIE WALKER

Contemporary music, along with modern language, is the key to evangelism.

This is the theme of Friday and Saturday's Kansas District Conference on Worship and Evangelism. The conference is presented by the Lutheran Student Fellowship and will be in All Faiths Chapel. "It's hard to evangelize if you're using archaic language," said Cyndy Warnier, music minister for the Fellowship Ministries in Arizona. "It's not a language we speak today. You don't hear people saying 'thee' and 'thou' all the Warnier will be conducting conference workshops on the use of music in worship services.

"Congregations of tomorrow will be led by students of today," said Morris Olson, conference coordinator. "We need to expose them to different worship styles that they're not accustomed to seeing in their own services.'

How to use music, drama and the liturgy as evangelical tools are a few of the topics that will be addressed in the 18 workshops offered.

"Students who go to the conference will find that they can be involved in change," Warnier said. "They can lead youths in worship, or maybe they have skill with an instrument. We find that music is definitely a tool for growth and evangelism in church.'

Olson said the goal of the conference is to give participants ideas they can use in their own congregation.

"This is not only for Lutherans," Olson said. "We hope the people who come will learn new techniques they can incorporate and meet the needs of the unchurched."

Evangelism is becoming more necessary because more people are looking around for a religion rather than belonging to the religion of their parents, Warnier said.

About 70 people have preregistered, and 100 are expected to attend.

football in Montana?

One word comes to mind when I think of Montana - frigid. Out where God left his bicycle, Montana can offer one thing Kansas can't - mountains. Skiing would be my only reason to go there.

Who would attend school in Missoula, Mont., anyway? And why?

I welcome you to Geography 159 - the study of Montana. Sounds boring, I know. But K-State sounds like a yawner to plenty of people, too. The University of Montana is located in western Montana, halfway between Glacier and Yellowstone national parks. And if you're the outdoorsman, there are plenty of fishing, hunting and backpacking opportunities.

Sounds like Ed Skoog's kind of place. Skip class, backpack five miles, set up camp, catch and skin supper, roll up in a sleeping bag and make it back in time for an 8:30 a.m. chemistry

Do they even know what football is in Montana? It hasn't quite caught on, not like bungee jumping or Birkenstock sandals. Montana's stadium barely holds 15,000, which is 5,000 more than its enrollment. Oh, yeah its football team is No. 16 in the latest NCAA Division I-AA poll.

No joke. Montana has 26 Rhodes scholars and ranks 17th of all American colleges and universities in the number of Rhodes scholars produced. In addition, eight Montana students have received Truman scholarships.

The Grizzlies had four football players named to the 1988 GTE all-American first or second team — the most by any Division I program in the nation. It's not just a bunch of idiots under those pads and helmets.

MATT

WALTERS

There's not a lot to tell you about Montana. As a suggestion for the fans, reminder, the Indiana State Sycamores nearly stung K-State last year, losing by the slimmest of margins, 26-25.

It's a very respectable program at Montana. The Grizzlies pushed the PAC-10's Washington State Cougars for the full four quarters in the first game of the season. Sunday, they clubbed Chico State. Montana has two games under its belt and is very eager for a crack at Bill Snyder's

Not only must Snyder's team concern itself with the Grizzlies but also with the play of the Wildcats as well.

Will anybody step forward at quarterback? How will the running-back game fare? Can Gerald Benton, Andre Coleman and Mitch Running fill the vacancies left by Frank Hernandez and Michael Smith?

The season is here. It's about time. And the Cats aren't taking on Creampuff State either.

The Grizzlies have six consecutive winning seasons, including four straight years with seven or more wins. Furthermore, one year after the Cats lost to Northern Iowa 17-0, in 1986, Montana defeated the Panthers 33-16 in Iowa.

Sure, Montana doesn't have the talent of K-

Status of Gallon still in question

Inexperience at the running back position has become a problem since 1,000-yard rusher Eric Gallon was sidelined for an injured knee.

Gallon made the all-Big Eight second team last season, gaining 1,102 yards on 224 carries. He became the third rusher in Wildcat history to gain 1,000 yards in a season. Also, Gallon caught 49 passes for 463 yards.

Gallon's senior season looked promising before he suffered the injury in spring practice. He had reconstructive surgery in April and is expected to miss the early part of the season.

"Eric has put in a lot of time and effort into rehabilitation," Coach Bill Snyder said. "We're going to take it day by day with him.'

Snyder did not say, however, that Gallon is already scratched for the Montana game.

"If Eric is ready Saturday, we'll play him Saturday,"

If Gallon's condition progresses slowly, he will gradually appear early in the season and would hope to return before the Cats enter conference play. Once Gallon returns, he will need 928 yards to became K-State's all-time rusher, passing Isaac Jackson at 2,182

Sophomore J.J. Smith leads a trio of running backs to carry the load in Gallon's place. His brightest moment last season was when he had a 72-yard touchdown run in K-State's 41-7 win over Idaho State. For the 1991 season, he was the third leading rusher with 157 yards on 18 carries in only six games. He will get his first collegiate start on Saturday.

"Smith has the lead due to injuries in the spring to Leon Edwards and Bryant Brooks," running back coach

Edwards impressed coaches in the early drills before injuring an ankle in the spring. The 5-foot-6, 160-pound back sat out last season after transferring from

J.J. Smith, sophomore running back, is congratulated by offensive linemen after one of his two rushes that netted 28 yards during last year's 32-0 shutout of the Missouri Tigers at KSU Stadium.

Receivers face task of replacing Smith and Co.

SIEAE I Collegia

The 1992 Wildcat receiving crew can be summed up in one word - confident.

"We'll catch anything," said senior receiver Gerald Benton.

Benton, along with junior Andre Coleman, freshman Mitch Running and a multitude of other receivers, will be asked to fill the void left by the departure of Michael Smith and Frank Hernandez, who combined for 999 receiving yards a year ago.

In the 1991 campaign, Coleman caught 18 passes for 279 yards. He led the team with 15.5 yards per reception. He was second only to Smith with four touchdown receptions, including the gamewinning snag against Kansas. He has good hands and his legitimate deep threat that Smith couldn't offer the Cats.

"We have the confidence, and we believe in ourselves," Coleman said. "There's going to be some big plays from the receivers."

Benton caught 11 passes last season, good for 121 yards. He was chosen the Big Eight offensive newcomer of the year, despite his back-up role.

Freshman Mitch Running, who is first on the depth chart, led all receivers in the spring game with seven receptions for 176 yards.

"We definitely have a stronger receiving crew than we had a year ago," Running said. "Definitely."

Perhaps the greatest difference between this year's starters and those from a year ago is the breakaway speed that both tremendous speed opens up a Coleman and Benton possess, gone against the big boys yet." receiving coach Del Miller said.

'We probably have more speed than we've ever had before," he said. "I think everyone will be pleasantly surprised."

Even though the Cats filled the wide receiver gap, yet another void remained - tight end. Russ Campbell, who played the position last season, finished his senior year with 595 receiving yards.

The heir to the throne is sophomore Brian Rees. He is first on the depth chart but will have his hands full staving off junior Brad Seib for the starting nod. Rees, like Campbell, is a big target 6-foot-5, 245 pounds - with

"It's a lot of pressure filling a guy like Russ' shoes," Rees said. "I have confidence, but I haven't Rees did not catch a pass in 1991.

Seib weighs in at 235 pounds but has a 35-inch vertical nonetheless. He had three receptions for 18 yards in the spring game. Freshman Brian Lojka is destined for a reserve role, but at 6-foot-6, 250 pounds, he is the team's biggest tight end.

Indeed, the receiving crew took a blow when Smith and Co. stepped off the gridiron. But throwing to the explosive receiving styles of the Wildcat receivers have K-State quarterbacks waiting anxiously.

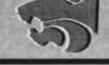

These guys have the potential to get the ball in the end zone no matter where they catch it on the field," quarterback Jason Smargiasso said.

TONDO WALDRON

Collegian "Women, please clear the court - men's volleyball is up.' If things go as planned for members of the K-State men's volleyball club, they will get to hear this line more than once this year.

The team is working on a schedule that includes all of the Big Eight schools, said team president Ken Martin, and the squad hopes to play in accordance with the women's team.

"We hope to follow the women's schedule this fall and play either prior to or following the women's match, wherever they may play," Martin said. Although their travel money will come from the players' own pockets, they are willing to endure the expense to get the opportunity to take the court. The club is only in its second semester of competition but has already advanced to the A level, just one step below collegiate level. This allows them to compete with teams like Iowa State, a squad that has played for 25 years. "Our first goal was to advance past the intramural level of play, and we are far and away past that," Martin said. "Teams like UCLA are more powerful than us, but we play the same style of play" Although the club begins the semester without three of last year's starters, it should still be a force to be reckoned with because of the lineup of

"We have a lot of depth in the squad this semester. It's amazing how students with a lot of talent just happen to hear about the team around campus and show up at practice," vice president Brent Demmitt said. "The team is always looking for new players." In conjunction with practices four days a week, the club also helps the women's team by calling lines at

'We want to show our appreciation to Patti (Hagemeyer). She has helped out a lot," Martin said.

The team is looking forward to the upcoming season to see just how much it has improved, Martin said.

" A lot of people don't realize how fast-paced men's volleyball is at K-State," Martin said. "It's not intramurals."

The men's club has not yet played in conjunction with the women's team this season. The team has, however, received agreement from three Big Eight schools to play during the women's conference schedule, Demmitt

Iowa State, Nebraska and Kansas are the schools that the team has received verbal confirmations from, Demmitt

This will be the first time the men's club gets to play a first-team squad from a Big Eight school.

"Last year we hardly broke a sweat when we played the second team from Kansas," Martin said. "I'm sure the guys from the Kansas first team will be eating their Wheaties before they take the court against us." The squad will open its Big Eight season against the Jayhawks Sept. 30.

▶KC LOSES GRAHAM; SMITH ON PRACTICE SQUAD

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (AP) - With offensive tackle Derrick Graham lost for the season, the Kansas City Chiefs have signed Joe Staysniak, a 296-pound offensive lineman who spent last season with the Buffalo Bills.

Graham, 25, suffered a sprained knee in Sunday's victory over Seattle and is expected to have surgery this week. He was placed on injured reserve Wednesday as the Chiefs announced the signing of Staysniak.

Staysniak, also 25, was a four-year starter at tackle for Ohio State. The San Diego Chargers picked him in the seventh round of the 1990 NFL draft but released him.

The Chiefs also added two players to their practice squad Wednesday and released another, defensive end Pellom McDaniels

ORIOLES COMPLETE 3-GAME SWEEP OF ROYALS

BALTIMORE (AP) — Mike Mussina pitched a four-hitter, and Luis Mercedes' double keyed a two-run sixth inning, as the Orioles kept up the pressure on Toronto in the AL East race by beating the Kansas City Royals 3-0.

Baltimore pitchers allowed only two runs in 32 innings during the three-game series for an ERA of 0.56. The Orioles' offense, which had been limited to just 18 runs in its nine previous games, got 13 hits, including three apiece by Chris Hoiles and Cal Ripken. Mussina (16-5) walked two, struck out four and did not allow a runner past first base in his fifth straight victory. It was his fourth shutout and seventh complete game of the Kansas City fell a season-high 19 games under .500 with its seventh loss in eight games

"We haven't been swinging the bats," Royals manager Hal McRae said. "We're going through a drought. Our pitchers are giving us an opportunity to win ballgames."

George Brett was 1 for 4 and now needs 16 hits in 17 games to reach 3,000.

Time marches forward at K-State to the sound of bells.

Anderson Hall's carillon sounds the hour, marks the quarter- and half-hour, and plays a musical selection at noon.

The music has become a part of daily life on campus.

The Schulmerich Carillon was donated to the University by the estate of Ralf Hockens of Arrington

The carillon does not have the traditional cast bells. Instead, the bell sound is duplicated through electronics and amplifiers.

"The carillon is a set of bells with an electronic keyboard and some electronic equipment," said Jack Flouer, head of the music department. "The sound comes out of a set of speakers for the system, which are located in the bell tower."

The carillon is in a small, climate-controlled room in Anderson Hall. The unit looks like two large filing cabinets sitting in the middle of the room. A small keyboard unit off to the right side can be used for manual play.

The music department is in charge of the operation and general care of the carillon unit.

"We've been asked by the University to take care of the carillon, the general maintenance and operation," Flouer said. "If there is a big problem, however, the University maintenance or a repairman may have to do the work.

In 1981, the carillon's electronic system was upgraded. The change added length to the life of the carillon, as well as to the sound quality.

Flouer said a prerecorded tape is used most of the time. On special occasions, such as graduation ceremonies, the keyboard is used.

"There is a continuous play tape in the unit with several prerecorded songs on it," said Chris Banner, instrument repairman and technician with the music department. "The clock on the unit tells it to play the songs at selected

The carillon has several tapes recorded by its manufacturer for various occasions. A tape usually has 10-12 songs.

Most of the music is by famous composers, such as Tchaikovsky. Bach, Beethoven and Strauss, Banner said.

"Most of the music is classical," Banner said. "There is a Christmas tape, a graduation-time tape, and the rest are romantic-style classics."

Placebo use declines due to medical advances

KATIE WALKER

Placebos are rarely used in cases other than testing the effectiveness of a new drug. When they are used, consumers are paying for inactive ingredients.

The catch is that people given placebos think they are getting real medicine. That, in turn, can cause people to react to the placebo in the same manner they would react to the real drug.

However, pharmacists say there is no great danger of consumers being rooked out of money every time they fill a prescription.

One of the reasons placebos are used less often is that medical advances have increased the number of drugs available.

'We rarely see them used now," said Ron Riley, pharmacist at Barry's Drug Center. "Doctors are pretty good at diagnosing, and there are drugs for almost any complaint.

"Also, the patient is more aware these days. It used to be that they were pretty much in the dark. Now they ask questions, and the medical profession is more accountable."

A pharmacist at Reliable Drug Stores, who spoke on the condition of anonymity, said although the pharmacy has placebos, they have never been used during the five years she has worked there.

'They're just empty capsules filled with lactose. Basically, they're sugar pills," she said.

Previously, she said, she worked at a hospital in Topeka that used placebos.

"There was a psych ward there, and the placebos were used for those type of people," she said.

People curious about any drug they are taking can consult medical dictionaries listing active ingredients and what they are used

While medical advances may be one reason placebos are rarely used, moral standards are another

"I never prescribe them," said Larry Moeller, director of Lafene Health Center. "I think that it's dishonest. I'm not going to fool a patient into getting better. That doesn't really address the problem."

HAYS - The draft of a new mission statement for Fort Hays State University recommends cuts in some academic programs as part of a shift toward emphasizing undergraduate education.

But the study also outlines programs the university could add during the next 10 years.

President Edward Hammond said when releasing the recommendations Wednesday

The recommendations include eliminating the baccalaureate degree in home economics, along with master's degrees in art, music and physics, and a graduate certificate program in library media.

Fort Hays State now has 65 students majoring in home "Our new study will prepare economics, about equally divided FHSU for its second century," among dietetics, fashion merchandising and home-economics education, Department Chairman Merlene Lyman said. The department has two other tenured faculty members: Glen McNeil and Mary Pickard.

Lyman said she was told Tuesday of the recommendation to eliminate the department. She said she will look into the reasoning for the recommendation and what options are available.

Hammond pledged that students allowed to finish them and said he was confident the Board of Regents will support that promise.

The recommendations came from university vice presidents and program-review committees in response to a requirement for new mission statements and program reviews in all regent institutions.

"It's fair that everyone knows as soon as I know," Hammond said, stressing that no decisions have dations.

The university's emphasis will be on undergraduate education within an electronic learning environment, Hammond said.

"Teaching is the single most important thing we do," he said.

Several other changes include a plan to shift responsibility for remedial English and math courses and certificate programs in secretarial science and administration to Barton County Community College. The college could offer those courses on the Fort Hays State campus to students who are enrolled there.

except the presidential candidates. When someone registers here, they give up their residency in their home county and become a resident of Riley." Young Republicans and Young Democrats will be at the drive handing out information on their parties' platforms, and UPC and SGA will have information from Rock the Vote, Coverdale said. Rock the Vote is a non-profit, non-partisan organization to promote voter registration and the act of voting to 18- to 24-year-old Americans. U.S. Bureau of the Census statistics published in Rock the Vote's literature show not even half of this age group voted in the 1988 presidential election. According to the census, there were approximately 25,569,000 people between the ages of 18 and 24 in the United States in 1988. Of those, only about 12,321,000 were registered to vote, 9,255,000 of which actually voted.

"I think it's very important that the students start voting," said Mary Farmer, SGA Legislative Affairs chairwoman. "We're trying to make it easier for people to register by having it at convenient locations.

K-State Police transportation varied

Moped, patrol cars used; main cost is maintenance

KIM McNITT Collegian

Police transportation can mean anything these days.

"Over the years, we've used all different kinds of transportation from bicycles to electric cars, from mopeds to full-size cars," said Lt. Robert Mellgren of the K-State Police. "We've run through the whole gamut."

The campus police department owns four marked patrol cars, two unmarked cars, a moped and an inoperative electric car.

There are 20 officers on the force. But since the department must have officers on duty 24 hours a day, seven days a week, only three or four officers are on patrol department decided against the bikes, even though they provided easy access to more areas of campus than cars.

This limits the kinds of transportation the officers can use, Mellgren said.

'We need to be able to get from one end of campus to the other fairly quickly, and bicycles don't allow us to do that," Mellgren said.

"It would be great if we could have two officers on bikes all the time, but we don't have enough manpower to do that," he said. Officers use the department's moped for special events, such as home football games, where there are large crowds. Again, because of limited manpower, having officers patrol on foot is not feasible, Mellgren "There are times we'd like to see an officer on foot, but we're not able to do that," said K-State Police Chief Charles Beckom. Until better options - or more officers - are available, full-size cars remain the department's main source of transportation. It vehicles in top condition.

"There is no special funding for trading vehicles. We do it when the money's available," Mellgren said.

The cost of a car is about $14,000. But if all-new equipment were installed, it would be about

The equipment officers carry also keeps them in cars.

"A lot of that equipment would be hard to cram on a bicycle," Beckom said. The electric car, parked beneath the East Stadium stands, has not been operable for at least six years. Kansas Power & Light originally built the car and later turned it over to the Department of Engineering Technology. The campus police supplied the money to modify the car for the police department's use. Campus police used the electric car for about four years to patrol parking. Parking Services is now separate from the police.

The electric car had inherent problems. It could only hold its charge for so long, and it only had so much power to manipulate hills," Mellgren said.

The campus police retired the car when it developed problems that made it hazardous to operate.

"It's at least 10-15 years old design-wise. New models would be more efficient, but they would be costly. If we could modify the problems, we would use it again," Beckom said.

Money also affects transportation possibilities.

Mellgren said K-State's police department probably has one of the smallest budgets among universities of comparable size.

"Every officer would like to have the latest police-packaged vehicle," Mellgren said. "Sometimes they lose sight of the fact that this is a campus police department. We don't always need to be behind the wheel of that kind of a vehicle.

"I think our greatest limitation is we don't have the manpower to utilize every mode of transportation," Mellgren said.

Britain raises interest rates in attempt to stabilize weak pound

LONDON - Britain frantically tried to stabilize the weakening pound today by jerking around interest rates and suspending exchange-rate links with other European currencies.

But the moves, which still left interest rates sharply higher in Britain, only added to the monetary turmoil gripping Europe. And it spread economic uncertainty elsewhere, including the United States, by increasing the sense that cooperation among the large industrial countries is fracturing.

The British Treasury announced late today that it would suspend the pound from the European Monetary System, an agreement that keeps European currencies stable relative

The suspension was an effective devaluation of the pound because it meant the currency could fall below the limits set by the system.

That move came after the Bank of England raised interest rates from 10 to 15 percent in an attempt to strengthen the pound, one of the most stunning increases ever. The bank then rolled the increase back to 12 percent, but that still left British interest rates among the highest in the world.

Still, the pound kept falling in value, and the rise in interest rates pressured other countries to increase their rates as well. That is potentially bad for the global economy, which already is stagnating.

Proposal to regionalize community colleges

ASSOCIATED PRESS

TOPEKA - Education officials and lawmakers began discussing a proposal Wednesday to regionalize the state's community colleges.

The plan would involve levying property taxes in all counties to support the two-year schools.

Education Commissioner Lee Droegemueller said the proposal is enrollments at the state's 19 community colleges. He presented the proposal to the Legislative Educational Planning Committee and to the Joint Commission on Governance.

Under the proposal, financing for community colleges and area vocational technical schools would come from student tuition. increased state support and in response to the growth of requiring other counties within a region to collect property taxes for those schools.

Community colleges have been funded since 1965 by a mix of state aid, property taxes collected in the counties in which they are located, out-district tuition collected on students from other counties and student tuition.

Droegemueller told the Joint Commission on Governance that the role of community colleges has expanded enormously over the past three decades, attracting more nontraditional students.

He emphasized that the two-year schools are not competing with the state universities for students.

What a community college does is provide a starting place for students who have been frozen out of the process," Droegemueller said. "Students at community colleges are there for a reason. It might be family, it might be economics, it might be, 'I'm just not ready yet.""

It's a concept that deserves consideration, said Sen. Lana Oleen, R-Manhattan, chairwoman of the Legislative Educational Planning Committee.

Oleen wondered if a community college could deliver services to all parts of the district that supports it.

The "dumb" terminal, on the other hand, is connected to the mainframe computer located in Cardwell Hall. It can still print, but it will dump your files to a printer located somewhere else on campus - most likely Cardwell.

Beef-eating just a matter of personal taste

Cunnick said she does not eat meat or dairy products because of personal reasons.

"I didn't see why I had to live off of animals, when you can get the same amount of nutrition without," Cunnick said. "I don't recommend it for everyone, because some people can't do it. It was just the right choice for me."

Cunnick said another myth about beef is that vegetarians need to supplement their diet with pills to be well-nourished.

don't believe in supplementing," Cunnick said. "You can get the protein needed by eating beans. The only other things that you need to look at are calcium, iron and zinc. You can get all of this by taking your standard multiple vitamins."

Jane Bowers, head of K-State's Department of Foods and Nutrition, pointed out that one essential vitamin, B-12, is hard to find outside of meat. Bowers said the only other common source of B-12 is compressed yeast.

Consuming B-12 helps the metabolic process of proteins, fats and carbohydrates. Bowers said the recommended daily allowance of B-12 is three to four micrograms

"In order for you to get the same amount of B-12 that you would get from beef, you would have to eat a lot of yeast," Bowers said. "It would be enough that you would definitely know you were eating it. Yeast is something you don't ordinarily eat in large quantities."

Bowers said beef's only significant weakness is fat content.

"If people are going to have to eliminate every shred of fat from their diet, then I guess that beef would have to go," Bowers said. 'All meat has some fat. However, I don't know many people who need to eliminate all of that fat."

Elias said moderation is necessary to avoid eating unhealthy

"Of the reasons people stay away from beef, the most valid is fat," Elias said. "I am concerned that a lot of people who try to stay away from fat substitute things that often have more fat, like a Snickers bar. I'm not advocating not listening to your doctor, but it's all in the education."

Bowers said it is possible to have a perfectly healthy diet with or without animal products.

"If someone told me that they were going to become a vegetarian, I would tell them that in order to be successful, you have to be careful and selective," Bowers said. "You would have to know what you're

College may change programs

Nicholls again considered whether the program had centrality to the mission of the college, was integrated into the college and had perceived future demand, plus its

The report also evaluated cost effectiveness by asking if student/faculty ratios were too low within the individual program or department.

The resulting proposal for social work is a cut in faculty from five professors to three.

"My feeling was that we could offer a viable social work program with fewer faculty," Nicholls said. Cia Verschelden, assistant social work, remains unconvinced. She said the fact that the proposal includes a reduction in the number of of social work majors from 181 to less then 100 sends a powerful message to students.

"If we have limited enrollment, students are smart enough to know that they should go elsewhere if they want to be social work majors," she said.

Those programs that face potential elimination, like speech pathology and audiology, are victims of budget constraints, Nicholls said.

"The College of Arts and Sciences has been hit particularly heavy by the influx of students the last five to six years," he said. "Our resources have been continually strained, and we've had to reallocate resources to our service

Nicholls, however, made clear these are recommendations yet to be adopted by the corp group. No decision is expected this week.

And even if the group adopts them, any elimination of a program has to go through a policy review by the University.

"The University has a set of well-defined procedures for discontinuation of a program," Nicholls said. "Any role and aspiration recommendation that involves the discontinuation of a program would set them into motion. These procedures will be followed. Should a program be eliminated, Nicholls also promised that students will not have to immediately transfer to another school to complete their degree. "The institution has a commitment to see that all currently enrolled students are able to complete their degree," he said.

Students concerned about the proposals for the role and aspiration statement plan to demonstrate at noon today in front of the K-State

THE WILDCATS HEAD FOR

Among the many peculiarities in the 1992 Wildcat football schedule - a late Sept. 19 start, a four-game road trip throughout October and just two conference games in Manhattan - one oddity truly stands out: a home game in Tokyo.

Although K-State will receive $400,000 for the event dubbed the Coca-Cola Bowl, senior associate athletic director Jim Epps said the money is not what drew the Wildcats to the game in the Tokyo Dome.

"Sure, the game will bring us some much-needed funding," Epps said. "But that's not the main reason for the trip.

"In many instances, it will be a oncein-a-lifetime opportunity," he said. "It's certainly a unique opportunity for the young men to go to another culture.'

Two years ago, TelePlanning International, the organization that runs the Coca-Cola Bowl, approached K-State about the prospect of playing in Japan.

Negotiations have been ongoing since that time, Epps said. On Dec. 5, the product of those negotiations will take place - a home game against Nebraska in Japan. K-State will bring a party of 150 people to Tokyo. Included in that party will be players, coaches, trainers, managers, athletic administrators, friends of athletic administrators and cheerleaders.

TelePlanning International will provide the official party air transportation, hotel accommodations, meals and some ground transportation.

"It's a great opportunity," linebacker Brooks Barta said. "My chances of ever going back to Japan are one in a million."

Running back Eric Gallon said that, despite the estimated 14-hour journey, there are good times to be had.

"Man, that's a long trip," he said. "I haven't really thought about it much, but it might be kind of neat. I hope it's not all business. It is going to be a different culture, so we have to explore a little bit."

That exploration will have to be done without Gallon's fiancée of nine months. "I really don't want to leave my girlfriend," he said. "I'll miss her."

For one particular Wildcat the trip to Japan will be more than just a vacation it will be a homecoming.

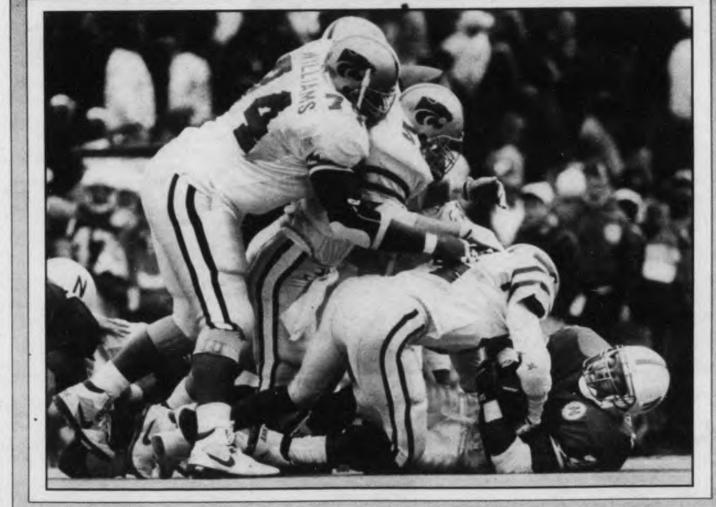

Defensive tackle Sean Dabney was born in Tokyo in 1971. He will return to his home for the first time in 18 years. "I'm excited that I can end my college career in the place that I was born," Dabney said. "I'm happy that I get to see my birth site." Dabney, whose father was stationed at a military base in Tokyo, said he has vague recollections of names and places "I remember bits and pieces," he said.

Among those bits and pieces are the statues, parks and sumo wrestlers.

Dabney said he also remembers babysitters he had as a child. He said he and his mother, who will make the trip at her own expense, are excited to have a chance to see them again.

In fact, one of his former babysitters sends him a birthday card every year. "It's not every day that I can see where was born," Dabney said.

The decision to make the trip to Tokyo was based on the considerations of players like Dabney, athletic director Milt Richards said.

"We're doing this to broaden the opportunities of our young people," he said. "The only reason for the trip is because athletics is a mechanism for young people to develop."

finances in the ultimate decision?

"The money is nice," Richards said. "We will definitely make a lot of money,

Toronomer or in the interior of the interior o

But how important was the role of and we wouldn't make the trip if that weren't the case."

Had the game not been played in Tokyo, it would be in Manhattan, Richards said. Assuming the game would be a sell-out, K-State could have grossed as much as $425,000, but $150,000 of that would have gone to Nebraska, and other expenses would have had to be deducted. "I would have much rather had the game in Manhattan for our fans," Richards said. "But, again, we're doing this for the younger people.

Richards isn't the only person who would like to have the game played in front of the home crowd.

"Manhattan would really be the place to play Nebraska," Barta said.

This isn't the first time that K-State has flirted with a home game in Tokyo. Four years ago, TelePlanning International approached the Cats about playing Oklahoma in the Tokyo Dome.

The deal was all but sealed when Oklahoma was put on NCAA probation and prohibited to play in any televised games. Since the game was to be shown in Japan, the deal fell through.

Not this time.

"I've been waiting for this game for three years," Dabney said, who was a freshman when the initial Tokyo game

"I just hope nothing stops me from going this time," he said.

Lincoln, Manhattan or Tokyo, the bottom line remains the same - the Cats want to win.

"The trip out there will be a long one," linebacker Chris Patterson said.

"But hopefully, the trip back will be a

Kathy Saxton never expected to be a college volleyball player.

An all-state basketball player in high school who owned several Kansas scoring records, Saxton's college athletic career seemed decided.

"I was born and bred for basketball," Saxton said. "Everybody told me, since I was left-handed, that was my thing what I'd use to go to college."

But now at the start of her senior year, Saxton finds herself leading the K-State volleyball team into its 1992 season.

As the only returning senior on the Wildcat squad that went 10 and 19 a year ago, Saxton is already leading by exam-In the Cats opening loss against Toledo, Ohio, Saxton set school records for kills (35) and attacks (77). The Big Eight rewarded her efforts with the league's first Player of the Week honors for the 1992 season. "Coach (Patti) Hagemeyer chose Stephanie Liester and I to be the co-captains this year," Saxton said. "She wants us to be the ones to provide the leadership, especially with all the new people this "Kathy has been a joy to coach. She's been one of the highlights of coaching at K-State. We need her to provide intensity for us on the court, Hagemeyer said."

Saxton started her volleyball career at Mulvane in the eighth grade, mostly, as a way to keep in shape for basketball sea-

But that changed her sophomore year at a state volleyball camp.

"I went to my first camp and made the all-star team as a sophomore," she said. "I did it over a lot of juniors and seniors, and the coach at Wichita State kept talking to me about it. Before, it had never dawned

Saxton came to K-State after being recruited to walk on by former coach Scott Nelson and to take advantage of the accounting program.

Saxton spent her freshman year as a red-shirt, a season she called her toughest. "It was hard to accept coming from high school where you're the big man, to becoming basically a ball-shagger, where nobody knew my name," she said.

Last season was also rough for Saxton, not because of the team's losing record, but because of the number of players that left the team during the season.

"The way people quit, and the scenes that were made were really hard to deal with. There was no call for any of that," Saxton said. "But if anything, it helped the rest of us become closer."

Last season had its highlights for Saxton, however. She was named an honorable mention all-conference selection and Big Eight Player of the Week after the team played Drake and Colorado.

Saxton was also an Academic All-Big Eight pick for the second consecutive year, something she would like to repeat in her senior season.

Other goals for her last year are more team-oriented. "We all want and plan on going to the Big Eight Tournament this year," Saxton said. "That's something that hasn't happened since I've been here."

Saxton said she knows any success the team will have will depend on the play of the six freshmen recruited in the off-sea-

"The freshmen have come in with the best attitude," she said. "They all come from really successful high-school teams and have pushed the rest of us from the first day to get better."

With graduation looming, Saxton is planning for life after volleyball. "I'm taking the CPA exam in the spring, then I'll really start looking for a job," she said.

"I'd like to work for a public accounting firm, or maybe set up a private firm of my own, but I hate wearing anything but cutoffs. Going to suits and pantyhose will be quite a change after all this."

Suzanne Sim begins her senior year and is ready for its challenges

FRANK KLEEMANN

The tennis world has changed for Suzanne Sim, but she is ready for it.

Sim, K-State senior, is suddenly in the position of taking over the leadership role among the netters after last year's top four players left the Wildcats program. It's a role change for which Sim was waiting.

"I'm looking forward to the challenge of leading the team," Sim said. "I always have had someone above me, a senior to go to. After four years, it's my turn to take that role."

Cats coach Steve Bietau said Sim is the right person to lead his young team.

"Suzanne is definitely the most experienced player on the team," he said. "As coach, you like to see that she'll step into the type of person to get in front of a group, but I think she has the ability to do

In the past, the Lenexa, Kan., native played behind top players but developed herself as an important factor for the team. In her sophomore season, Sim was beginning to get a feel for being in a leading position. Sim played the No. 2 position in singles behind Michèle Riniker of Switzerland, finishing with a 12-23

Last year, Sim began to set an example when she won match-decisive games for the netters as No. 5.

Bietau said Sim was comfortable in her position then and could lift up her game level and confidence.

Sim went 6-1 in conference play, missing the Big Eight champion crown on position No. 5 only because she moved up seed to No. 4 against Missouri.

"She can lead in the way of how she works, how she fights in the matches and how she prepares," he said.

Team finds strength in unity

FRANK KLEEMANN

With All-American Todd Trask running out of eligibility, the men's cross country team is looking for a new personality.

Since nobody has claimed the position yet, K-State's racing plan might be to overpower the other teams en masse - with 10 equally strong runners.

"Right now the individual positions in the team are wide open, which is good," said Coach John Capriotti. "If we get then all together it could be a surprising team. If Capriotti has to pin down some harriers who eventually will lead the squad, his first picks are two seniors. "It looks like Mike Becker and Anthony Williams are two of our better runners," he said. "Anthony had a really good track season and is starting coming out."

Williams finished 17th at last year's Big Eight meet while 1991 NJCAA indoor two-mile champion Becker placed 14th.

For this season both said they look for more.

"I hope Mike and I can finish at three and four, or five and six, right behind each other," Williams said.

"My individual goal is to become an all-American," Becker said. "But realistically, I think more about the team than about myself because I think the team is going to the nationals. The team will be very good."

Becker and Williams said their part of leadership right now is their

"Yeah, coach talked about senior leadership," Williams said. "So we have to put it out there, regardless."

"The only thing that's going for me is experience and that stuff," Becker said. "We have such a good crew this year that you can say that maybe off the course Anthony and I will be the leaders. But on the course, it's anyone's ball game."

Both seniors said having experience does mean to have a top spot on the team. Becker said it will be a fight for the top 10 positions because K-State probably has the deepest team ever.

"If I run at No. 5, I would be happy because I know the guys in front of me are good enough that I won't be ashamed that they run in front of me," Becker said.

Williams said not having a dominant runner, such as Trask, will challenge the team to step up together.

Capriotti said he is happy to have such a competitive group, hoping that the runners push each other, especially at the conference meet and District V championships.

"We're united," Becker said, supporting his coach's view. "That's something I don't think we had so Valerie Hahn, the lone senior on the women's team, has fallen into the role of team leader and has high expectations for herself as well. One of those is a competitive spirit. "I'm a senior and I expect to be a leader, even if I am not leading in scoring. Everyone is playing so well that they will all have a chance to lead," Hahn She said she is aiming for finishing in the top five in the conference. Hahn filled the No. 1 and 2 positions last season, alternating with then senior, Adena Hagedom. Along with the absence of Hagedorn, Theresa Coyle used up her eligibility, and sophomore Julie White transferred. Three of the five positions were left open. With the recruitment of five freshman, one sophomore transfer, and one player ending her red shirt year, the team has more depth than in the past.

"If someone is having a bad week, there's always someone else to go now. Before we didn't have anyone to fall back on," Hahn said.

The men's team is relying on the strength of their 14 members as well. With two returning seniors, and the loss of only two, the seven new players are enough to fill the voids. Three of five of the usual traveling-team members are returning and among them is senior Richard Laing.

Laing was among the competitors in the NCAA Regional Tournament and finished the low player for the Big Eight.

"We are stronger this year from top to bottom. Any of the 14 players are better than our No. 5 player last year," Elliott said. The No. 5 position is an important one, he said, because it is the last position for qualifying to travel to a tournament. Elliott said he is hoping for a lot this season, but

WOMEN'S CROSS COUNTRY Staats quietly accepts role

FRANK KLEEMANN

Junior Paulette Staats will be the No. 1 runner for the K-State women's cross country team, even if she doesn't see herself as the leader. Janet Haskin, who is questionable due to injury, leaves Staats to assume the position. 'Leadership? I don't know," she said before the first race Sept. 11 in Wichita. "I just do whatever I can." But to Coach John Capriotti, the situation is much clearer.

"Right now, I would say Paulette is our No. 1 runner who returns," he said. "I expect some things of her. She had a really good summer of training, probably her best ever. Mentally, she is really determined to get a lot done this year.'

Last season, Staats finished 12th at the Big Eight championships but had an unpleasant experience at the NCAA championships at Tucson, Ariz. During the course, Staats collapsed and was later diagnosed with mitral valve prolapse. That means, one of her heart valves was not closing correctly and caused her blood to flow improperly. "Her confidence wasn't really high, and she was running a little bit scared, which I don't blame her for," Capriotti said. "Going into a race and passing out, and not remembering what happened - that's scary." Over the summer Staats worked

"I've been practicing in the heat all summer, trying to get myself more tolerant of it," she said. "I don't think I should have a problem with it this year. I'm trying to make myself

Capriotti continues to give Staats the support she needs to step into her

"She's a role model, because she does well in school and because she works hard. She's good to follow. We're gonna need that to run for the conference championships," he said.
